

For what it's worth, this shutdown is now longest

Solutions of past unlikely in a harder-line setting

By Jim Puzzanghera and Tal Kopan
GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — Past federal government shutdowns ended in one of two ways: a significant number of rank and file senators struck a bipartisan compromise or a top-down deal was

SHUTDOWN
DAY 36

14
Failed Senate votes

Sept. 19
Date of last House session

594,048
Workers furloughed

35 days
Previous longest shutdown

brokered by congressional leaders of both parties and the president.

So far, neither has happened this fall as on Wednesday, the current shutdown sets a new record of 36 days and counting.

The previous record-long shutdown in 2018-19 ended after a deal brokered by Senate leaders and President Trump, finally precipitated by a spate of flight delays on the East Coast. And a year earlier, a group of 23 senators quickly crafted a compromise to end another shutdown.

That so-called bipartisan gang shepherded a bill that opened the government mere days after it shut down. Nearly half of the senators who struck that deal — six Republicans and five Democrats — are no longer serving. Several were replaced by more hard-line partisans. And others who remain have decided not to join a smaller bipartisan group that has been working behind the scenes to find a way to end the current stalemate.

SHUTDOWN, Page A7

Platner finds support as he tries to weather the storm

By Sam Brodey
GLOBE STAFF

DAMARISCOTTA, Maine — When Graham Platner opened his town hall event last Monday night, the transformed dynamic around his insurgent, populist bid for Senate was as obvious as the autumn chill lingering outside the packed elementary school gym.

"I don't think this campaign is in trouble — I think this campaign is just getting started," said Platner. "It's Susan Collins who is in trouble."

The 41-year-old oyster farmer and military veteran didn't need to spell out why his campaign might, in fact, be in trouble. By now, seemingly everyone in Maine is aware of the damaging revelations that exploded into public view over the past month: his inflammatory comments on Reddit, the large tattoo on his chest that matched a Nazi symbol, and the churn of campaign staff in the wake of it all.

When Platner lamented, "I'm running as a Democrat still, despite the fact my party is destroying my life," sympathetic laughter echoed through the room.

Platner also didn't need to spell out why this moment felt more like a beginning than an end of something — not, at least, to this crowd. More than 700 showed up for his speech. Many

PLATNER, Page A7

A day of ins and outs

SUZANNE KREITER/GLOBE STAFF

Mayor Michelle Wu voted at Phineas Bates Elementary School with her children on Tuesday. She ran unopposed.

ACROSS THE COUNTRY

Mamdani wins in NYC, Spanberger elected governor in Va., Sherrill takes New Jersey

FROM LEFT: KIRSTEN LUCE/NEW YORK TIMES; ANGELA WEISS/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES; BRYAN ANSELM/NEW YORK TIMES

From left, Abigail Spanberger; New York mayor-elect Zohran Mamdani; Representative Mikie Sherrill of New Jersey. California voters backed the drawing of a new congressional map.

GLOBE NEWS SERVICES

In the first test of voter sentiment in President Trump's second term, Democrats won contested races for governor in two states on platforms opposing his policies amid rising concern about the state of the economy, including higher consumer prices and a stagnant job market.

In New York City, Zohran Mamdani, once a little-known state assemblyman, capped a stunning ascent in politics to win the mayoral race, campaigning as a democratic socialist and tapping into voters' deep frustration about affordability, particularly housing in one of the nation's most expensive cities.

Those three election victories, along with the passage of a plan to redraw the congressional map in California that could shift more US House seats to Democrats, turned an otherwise low-key off-cycle year into a mini-referendum on Trump's far reaching agenda.

Only two states held elections for governor in this cycle: Virginia, where former representative Abigail Spanberger easily beat the sitting lieutenant governor, a Republican; and New Jersey, where Representative Mikie Sherrill defeated the Republican candidate backed by Trump by focusing largely on the economy, public safety, and health care. Both were leading by about 13 percentage points over their Republican opponents in late returns Tuesday.

Spanberger and Sherrill actively distanced themselves from some of the Democratic Party's far-left policies and emphasized what Spanberger described in her victory speech as "pragmatism over partisanship."

But in New York City, Mamdani, the most-left leaning Democrat on the ballot Tuesday, won by a narrower margin, tallying just over 50 percent of the vote to about 41 percent for former governor Andrew Cuomo, running as an independent, and 7 percent for Republican Curtis Sliwa.

His election marks a series of firsts in New York City: its first Muslim mayor, the first of South Asian heritage, and the first born in Africa. He will also be the city's

NATIONAL, Page A6

THE REGION

No drama as Wu makes second term official

By Emma Platoff
GLOBE STAFF

Boston Mayor Michelle Wu, who in her first term transformed from a progressive leader in local politics into an ascending figure of the national Democratic opposition, officially secured a second term as polls closed Tuesday, the decisive end to a campaign that cemented her dominance in city politics.

► Wilson elected mayor in Somerville; controversial DeMaria out in Everett. B3.

The first woman and first person of color elected mayor of Boston, Wu, 40, this year added a new line to that history when her commanding performance in the September preliminary election chased her only major competitor from the race. Bolstered by consistent popularity locally and a prominent performance on the national political stage, Wu ran unopposed on Tuesday's ballot after a year in which it seemed her only real political opponent was President Trump.

Just beyond Boston's borders, change was abundant. Somerville voters on Tuesday elected a

LOCAL, Page A6

JOHN BLANDING/GLOBE STAFF/FILE
Mr. Cheney, shown with his wife, Lynne, in 2000, was the chief architect of the war on terror.

DICK CHENEY 1941-2025

Powerful and polarizing, a VP who led his way

By Barton Gellman and Marc Fisher
WASHINGTON POST

Former vice president Dick Cheney, who recast an understudy's job into an engine of White House power, becoming chief architect of a post-9/11 war on terrorism that involved bypassing restrictions against torture and domestic espionage, died Tuesday. He was 84.

The cause was complications from pneumonia and cardiac and vascular disease, according to a statement from his family. They did not say where he died.

Heart disease had shadowed Mr. Cheney most of his adult life and was a particular concern during his two terms as next-in-line to President George W. Bush. He suffered the first of five heart attacks at 37 and had eight "cardiac events" between the 2000 and 2008 elections.

After the catastrophic attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, Mr. Cheney, the nation's 46th vice president, took on the role of primary strategist in all-out military deployments in Afghanistan and, later, Iraq. As part of this

CHENEY, Page A10

Governor Maura Healey's administration may offer buyouts of up to $20,000 to state employees in a bid to cut costs. B1.

Web browsers are in for a big change with artificial intelligence, but it could mean security risks, at least at first, writes Hia-watha Bray. B5.

All'Antico Vinaio, the latest offshoot of the famed Italian original, has arrived in Back Bay. Devra First checks it out. G1.

And gusting for all

Wednesday: Sunny, windy. High 57-62. Low 42-47.

Thursday: Still blowing. High 50-55. Low 33-38.

Sunrise: 6:23 Sunset: 4:32

Weather and Comics, G6-7.

VOL. 308, NO. 128

Suggested retail price
$4.00

