

Boston Sunday Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MARCH 15, 2026

Inside the upheaval at the BSO

In the battle between traditional and modern, the maestro lost out

By Malcolm Gay
GLOBE STAFF

He had the love of the players, but in the end, that wasn't enough for Andris Nelsons to keep his job.

Gasps erupted across Symphony Hall as news broke about the unceremonious dismissal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's music director last Friday. Some orchestra members wept backstage. Their grief came with outrage. Not only were the musicians not consulted about the move, they learned about it at the same time as the broader public: Nelsons was out because he wasn't "aligned on future vision."

Stricken, the players hastily organized a meeting the following day, where they read aloud a letter of opposition intended for board members. That evening, they registered a symbolic protest from the stage: Instead of tuning up in front of the audience, as they normally do, the musicians entered en masse just before the night's performance.

NELSONS, Page A10

ROBERT TORRES

Andris Nelsons' tenure in Boston will end next year.

Moulton reaches outside for help

Asks unenrolled voters to back bid within party

By Kelly Garrity
GLOBE STAFF

The US Senate primary pitting Representative Seth Moulton against incumbent Senator Ed Markey is supposed to be the marquee political contest in Massachusetts this election year.

But even to get on the primary ballot in September, Moulton has to first persuade hundreds of attendees of the Democratic Party's upcoming annual convention to back him. And in a sign of potential vulnerability within his own party, Moulton is trying to get a wave of voters who aren't registered as Democrats to become convention delegates in order to boost his chances of making the ballot.

Candidates must clear the relatively low bar of getting support from at least 15 percent of the thousands of delegates at the May convention to qualify for the primary ballot.

And that Moulton is turning to independents to clear the 15-

SENATE, Page A11

Can public radio giants still afford to go it alone?

By Aidan Ryan
GLOBE STAFF

Leaders of GBH and WBUR have long held to the conviction that there are enough ears in Greater Boston for two NPR stations.

But now, after Congress and President Trump defunded public media, at least one of them seems willing to consider whether Boston can still afford two separate public media giants.

"I, frankly, think that the moment of a loss of federal funding is the perfect time to reexamine that question," GBH chief executive Susan Goldberg said in a recent interview. "It would make a lot of sense to merge" the two organizations.

Goldberg's remarks come as GBH, WBUR, and many other public broadcasters across the country have so far weathered the $1.1 billion in federal cuts, thanks to a surge in donations and grants. But public media executives fear that the relief is

PUBLIC MEDIA, Page B5

FINN GOMEZ FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

A killing in Maine and the struggle for answers

BY PAUL HEINTZ | GLOBE STAFF

At top, a silhouette of Jaxon Mushero, a onetime friend of murder suspect Deven Young, at his home in Monroe, Maine. At right, Sunshine Stewart, during her time harvesting lobsters.

FRANKFORT, Maine — The last time Jaxon Mushero spoke with his closest childhood friend, Deven Young, their video call took an unsettling turn. Young panned the camera over several live squirrels he'd trapped in a 5-gallon bucket, without saying anything about what he planned to do with them.

Mushero, 19, still doesn't know what to make of the episode, which took place last year, about two months before his friend was charged with murder.

"I don't really want to talk about it," Mushero said in an interview, pulling out a vape pen to settle his nerves.

These days in Frankfort, there aren't a lot of people eager to talk about Young.

It's been half a year since Young, then 17, was charged in the death of Sunshine "Sunny" Stewart — a brutal crime that drew national attention to Young's hometown and to a campground an hour's drive south in Union, where Stewart was killed.

Stewart, a 48-year-old contractor from coastal Maine, had planned to spend parts of her summer inland, at Union's Mic Mac Cove Family Campground. On the evening of July 2, one of her first nights there, Stewart set off paddle-

MAINE, Page A8

Boston Legacy debuts in style

The women's soccer team drew 30,000 fans to Gillette Stadium in Foxborough but lost, 1-0, to defending champs Gotham. C1.

MARK STOCKWELL FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

VOL. 309, NO. 74

*

Suggested retail price
$6.00

0 947726 1

Air go blah

Sunday: Overcast, rain late.
High 39-44, low 35-40.

Monday: More rain.

Sunrise: 6:56. Sunset: 6:50.

Complete report, C22.

Obituaries, C21.

US forces bombed military infrastructure around Iran's main oil terminal and refinery, prompting Tehran to threaten the ports of Gulf neighbors. A2.

The big night is here for Hollywood, and our movie critic offers up a panoply of Oscar predictions. N1.

EARN
3.95%
Annual Percentage Yield*
with an Eastern 4-month
featured CD

Grow your balance with confidence.

- Minimum opening deposit: $2,500
- Available for personal and business accounts

Eastern Bank
JOIN US FOR GOOD®

Open an account online at EasternBank.com/FeaturedCDs or at your local Eastern branch

*Annual Percentage Yield (APY) is accurate as of 3/13/2026. This offer, interest rates, or APY may change at any time at the discretion of the Bank. Fees may reduce earnings. A penalty may be imposed for early withdrawal. Certificates of Deposit will be renewed at standard (not Featured) Personal Account CD or Business Account CD rates at maturity, unless the depositor instructs the Bank otherwise. Consumer customers: Please refer to the Personal Deposit Account Agreement for details. Business customers: Please refer to the Business Deposit Account Agreement for details. Member FDIC.