

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 16, 2025

Walshe convicted of slaying his wife

Faces life imprisonment in case of missing body

By Sean Cotter and Travis Andersen
GLOBE STAFF

DEDHAM — A Norfolk County jury found Brian Walshe guilty of murdering his wife in a high-profile case complicated by the elaborate plan he enacted in the days after her death: dismembering her corpse, covertly disposing of it, and falsely reporting her missing.

Jurors deliberated for about five hours over two days before convicting him of first-degree murder after a two-week trial in Norfolk Superior Court.

“Couldn’t be happier,” Norfolk District Attorney Michael Morrissey told reporters outside the courthouse shortly after the verdict was returned.

Ana Walshe, 39, was an executive with the real estate investment firm Tishman Speyer. She emigrated from Serbia in 2005 and, through force of hustle and personal magnetism, worked her way from line-level hotel jobs up to a lucrative career in the nation’s capital, friend said. She radiated joy and confidence and was devoted to her three young boys, they said.

Morrissey said prosecutors spoke with her sister after the verdict, and she had a message: “Just
WALSHE, Page A10

Brian Walshe was escorted out of a Dedham courtroom after being found guilty of the first-degree murder of his wife, Ana.

Reiner, son seen arguing at LA party

32-year-old arrested in parents’ stabbing deaths

By Matt Stevens, Shawn Hubler, and Nicole Sperling
NEW YORK TIMES

LOS ANGELES — A son of celebrated Hollywood director Rob Reiner and Michele Singer Reiner was arrested on suspicion of murder in the deaths of his parents, police said Monday.

►Obituary, C10. The arrest Sunday came the day after the father and son were seen arguing at a party at the home of comedian Conan O’Brien, according to a party attendee who recalled Rob Reiner telling his son that his behavior was inappropriate.

The attendee, who asked not to be identified to maintain relationships, did not speak to any of the Reiners at the party and added that it was unclear what the argument was about.

The son, Nick Reiner, 32, was being held in a jail in Los Angeles County, police said.

Jail records viewable online initially indicated that bail had been set at $4 million, but those records have since been modified. He was being held without bail, police said.

Police said the couple were found dead in their home in the upscale Brentwood neighborhood of Los Angeles on Sunday afternoon. Two people who were briefed on the case but not authorized to speak publicly said the couple had been stabbed to death.

Police officials said the case would be presented Tuesday to the Los Angeles district attorney as the office considers charges. No additional information about criminal charges was immediately available.

Rob Reiner, 78, was a popular sitcom actor before directing a slate of beloved films, including “This Is Spinal Tap,” “When Harry Met Sally ...” and “The Princess Bride.”
REINER, Page A5

Focus shifts to surveillance cameras

As anxiety builds once more on Brown campus, police seek tips on gunman

By Steph Machado, Sarah Rahal, and Joey Flechas
GLOBE STAFF

PROVIDENCE — In a city where police can tap live feeds of hundreds of surveillance cameras, the identity of the Brown University campus shooter remained unknown to the public Monday evening as the community mourned the two students who were killed and rallied around the nine others injured on Saturday.

But newly released images and the offer of a reward signaled authorities were intensifying a man-hunt as much as they could without knowing which man they are hunting.

Hundreds of local, state and federal law enforcement officers were deployed to work the case and comb through surveillance footage in a search for the killer. Providence police released two short clips showing a person dressed in dark clothing walking away from the scene, though it is difficult to see the person’s face. At a Monday evening press conference, the FBI released the clearest images of the suspect yet and announced a $50,000 reward for information leading to the identification, arrest, and conviction of the individual.

The slow drip of facts and images from the case paint a complicated scenario for law enforcement — three days after an unknown assailant used a 9mm gun to fire several rounds in a Brown University building on the edge of campus, the shooter remains unidentified and a motive is unknown.

Investigators acknowledged that time was not on their side.

“The sooner we can identify this person, the sooner we can blow this case open,” said Rhode Island Attorney General Peter F. Neronha. “But that’s the work that has to

INVESTIGATION, Page A7

‘The sooner we can identify this person, the sooner we can blow this case open.’

PETER F. NERONHA, Rhode Island attorney general

SUZANNE KREITER/GLOBE STAFF

Graduate student Anne Clark paid her respects Monday at the scene of the shooting in front of the Brown School of Engineering.

Lives cut short: political leader, aspiring doctor

By Giulia McDonnell Nieto del Rio, Marcela Rodrigues, and Shannon Larson
GLOBE STAFF

Last week, Ella Cook and MukhammadAziz Umurzokov were normal college students living normal college lives: exhaustively studying for exams, patronizing a usual smoothie shop, getting ready to reunite with family during winter break in just a few short days.

Cook, a sophomore from Alabama, was a leader in the college Republicans club and a familiar face in the Catholic community. Umurzokov, an Uzbekistani immigrant by way of New York and Virginia, was a freshman who dreamed of becoming a doctor.

On Saturday, their futures were abruptly cut short when a gunman opened fire inside a classroom at Brown University as the students attended an afternoon review session. The attack left Cook and Umurzokov dead, nine others injured, and the Brown and Providence community reeling as police
VICTIMS, Page A7

COLLEGE REPUBLICANS OF AMERICA

Ella Cook, a sophomore from Alabama, was remembered as a “bright light.”

COURTESY OF THE UMURZOKOV FAMILY

MukhammadAziz Umurzokov wanted to help children by becoming a doctor.

In College Hill neighborhood, an uneasy feeling

With the suspect in Saturday’s shooting still at large and progress for investigators slow, “everyone is just back on edge.” A6.

Issues with emergency alerts?

Some in the community and students at RISD say they lacked crucial information on the day of the attack and the aftermath. A6.

McGrory will rejoin Boston Globe as editor

By Aidan Ryan
GLOBE STAFF

Brian McGrory is returning to The Boston Globe as editor, the company’s co-owner and chief executive Linda Henry announced to staff Monday.

McGrory, the chair of Boston University’s journalism department, previously served as Globe editor from 2012 until early 2023. He was succeeded by Nancy Barnes, who announced Friday she would be stepping down from her role at the end of this week. Barnes, 64, will remain at the Globe as editor-at-large, and McGrory, also 64, will start as editor on Jan. 5.

“Life doesn’t always follow plans, and this wasn’t part of mine,” McGrory said in an email. “But pretty much my entire career has been tied to the Globe, proudly so, and I’m honored to return and play what I hope will be a helpful role during this complicated moment in the region and beyond.”

McGrory spent 34 years at the Globe, beginning as a reporter in 1989 and rising to become the newsroom’s top editor in 2012. The Globe earned three Pulitzer Prizes under his tenure, including the award for breaking news reporting for coverage of the Boston Marathon bombing.

McGrory is returning to the newsroom on a permanent basis, not as an interim editor, Henry told the Globe’s staff Monday, adding that BU granted him “an extended leave of absence.”
EDITOR, Page A5

The United States, Ukraine, and Europe reportedly agreed on a guarantee for the future security of Ukraine as peace talks with Russia falter. A3.

The bickering members of the Demoulas family are about to have it out in a civil suit set to open this week in Delaware, with future ownership of Market Basket at stake. D1.

Bedford-based iRobot announced it has filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection to help clear up its debt in preparation for a sale to its manufacturing partner. D1.

Governor Maura Healey has demanded that ICE halt detention flights from Hanscom Field and other airports in Massachusetts. B1.

Putting it mildly

Tuesday: Some sun, warmer. High 32-37, low 26-31.

Wednesday: Warmer still. High 43-48, low 28-33

Weather and comics, D5-6. Obituaries, C9-10.

VOL. 308, NO. 169
*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

