

DEFINITIVE GUIDE INSIDE

How to boost your health with a better love life

THE LATEST SCIENCE AND TOP EXPERTS

4-PAGE
PULLOUT

ELTON AND COWELL BACK CAMPAIGN TO PROTECT UK TALENT

Stellar names join fight to stop AI giants stealing work for free

Calling for a rethink: Sir Elton John

By Andy Jehring

TWO of the biggest names in music last night backed a major new Daily Mail campaign to stop AI plundering Britain's creative genius.

Sir Elton John and Simon Cowell called on ministers to rethink their radical proposals to relax copyright rules.

The two global megastars fear the next big acts will not be able to break through should the Government go ahead with plans to hand a copyright exemption to Big Tech firms.

They warned the plans risked destroying the UK's world-renowned £126 billion creative industries – and many thousands of

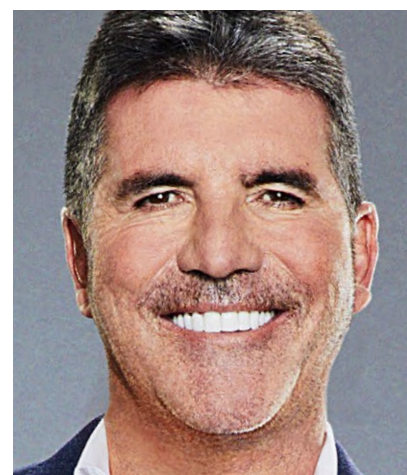

Daily Mail CAMPAIGN

Our creative genius leads the world

DON'T LET BIG TECH STEAL IT

jobs at the same time. Ministers are proposing to change existing laws so that the tech giants can use any online material, such as text, images or music, to improve their

Turn to Page 5

Fears for new stars: Simon Cowell