Unstable weather set to ease by tomorrow

NCM says rainfall expected today in most areas of the country

DUBAI

Gulf News Report

The UAE is expected to see weather conditions improve by tomorrow, according to the National Centre of Meteorology (NCM).

The NCM expects today's weather will be partly cloudy to cloudy, with some convective clouds, accompanied by heavy rainfall over most areas of the country at intervals, and a drop in temperatures.

Since last Saturday, the country has experienced successive waves of rainfall that initially affected western regions and islands before extending to coastal and urban areas including Al Dhafra, Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Sharjah, Ajman, Umm Al Quwain and Ras Al Khaimah, before reaching inland northern and eastern regions and Al Ain.

The NCM said the latest rain band began over western parts of the country before moving overnight towards Al Dhafra and Abu Dhabi, spreading by daytime to northern areas, Al Ain and eastern regions.

The system brought heavy rainfall at times, accompanied by lightning, thunder and occasional hail in limited areas, before cloud cover was expected to gradually decrease overnight.

Conditions to stabilise

Conditions are expected to stabilise further after tomorrow, with cloud cover decreasing and north-westerly winds becoming active to strong at times, particularly at sea, accompanied by a drop in temperatures.

Winds are forecast to shift from south-easterly to north-easterly before turning north-westerly, raising dust and sand in exposed areas and reducing horizontal visibility. Sea conditions are also expected to remain rough at times in the Arabian Gulf and the Sea of Oman.

UAE supply chains operating normally

ABU DHABI

Gulf News Report

Suhail Mohamed Al Mazrouei, Minister of Energy and Infrastructure and Chairman of the Supply and Transport Committee, affirmed that the transport system and supply chains in the UAE continue to operate efficiently and regularly within an integrated framework characterised by resilience and readiness.

This ensures the uninterrupted flow of goods and services, maintains market stability, and reflects the UAE's ability to respond effectively to various regional developments.

He stated that the UAE's supply and transport system is built on a comprehensive national framework led by the Supply and Transport Committee, with a focus on ensuring the continuity of supply chains and regulating freight movement in a manner that meets the country's strategic needs and enhances the efficiency of logistics flow management.

He noted that the committee plays a central role in developing and implementing flexible operational and regulatory mechanisms, including monitoring shipment movements, directing their distribution across various routes, and coordinating with federal and local entities. These efforts further strengthen the country's preparedness, support the sustainability of supply chains, and enhance the efficiency of the logistics system.

TRUMP TO IRAN: GET SERIOUS SOON, BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE

US proposal 'being deliberated upon' in Tehran, Pakistan says

DUBAI

US President Donald Trump has warned Iran to "get serious" about ending the war — even as US-Israeli strikes continue and Washington weighs a risky ground operation, raising fears that diplomacy and escalation are moving in parallel.

"They better get serious soon, before it is too late," Trump said, warning there would be "NO TURNING BACK" if talks fail. He also claimed Iran had been "militarily obliterated, with zero chance of a comeback".

The post comes a day after Trump insisted a deal is near. He said again yesterday that Iran is "begging" us to make a deal.

Violence on the ground

The warning came amid fresh violence on the ground.

Israel said it carried out a new wave of strikes against Iran yesterday, targeting infrastructure in cities including Isfahan, Shiraz and Bandar Abbas, while Iranian missiles triggered sirens across parts of Israel, where medics reported several people wounded.

The mixed signals over diplomacy continue. While Washington has put forward a 15-point proposal to end the conflict, Iran has publicly re-

TWO KILLED IN ABU DHABI DEBRIS INCIDENT

Abu Dhabi authorities have confirmed the deaths of two individuals—a Pakistani and an Indian national—after falling debris from a successfully intercepted ballistic missile on Sweihan Street caused casualties and property damage.

Earlier in the morning, officials reported that three others were injured and several vehicles were damaged. Emergency services were promptly on the scene.

Officials urged the public to rely solely on verified sources and avoid spreading rumours or unconfirmed information.

The latest Abu Dhabi incident raises the UAE's total death toll from missile and UAV debris to 11, with yesterday's strike claiming two lives and injuring three others.

jected the idea of negotiations. Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi said there were no talks underway, describing recent contacts as merely an "exchange of messages" and insisting Tehran's policy remained the "continuation of resistance".

Pakistan acts as intermediary

At the same time, Pakistan has confirmed it is acting as an intermediary. Foreign Minister Ishaq Dar said Islamabad was facilitating indirect US-Iran contacts by relaying messages, with the American proposal now "being deliberated upon" in Tehran — even as Iranian officials insist no formal negotiations are taking place. Turkey, Egypt and other countries are also said to be supporting the process, while the Gulf Cooperation Council has signalled it wants to be involved.

The mixed signals echo a pattern seen earlier in the conflict.

Almost exactly a month ago, indirect contacts between US envoys and Iranian officials were followed within days by US-Israeli strikes on February 28. Now again, talk of negotiations is resurfacing even as US-Israeli strikes continue and Washington weighs a risky ground operation.

Iran's growing leverage

At the centre of the confrontation is Iran's growing leverage over the Strait of Hormuz, through which around 20 per cent of global oil and gas supplies pass.

Tehran's ability to choke or restrict traffic through the narrow waterway has already pushed oil prices higher and raised fears of a wider economic shock.

Israel said yesterday it had killed Alireza Tangsiri, the commander of the Revolutionary Guards' navy, calling him "directly responsible" for mining and blocking shipping in the strait — a claim not yet confirmed by Iran.

Focus on Kharg Island

At the same time, focus is shifting to Kharg Island, Iran's key oil export hub.

The island, which handles nearly 90 per cent of Iran's oil exports, has taken on outsized importance in the conflict. Less than two weeks ago, the US carried out airstrikes targeting military installations there — a move analysts say underscored its strategic value without directly hitting energy infrastructure.

According to CNN, Iran has since moved to reinforce the island, laying traps and deploying additional weaponry, including shoulder-fired missiles, amid fears of a possible US assault.

Iranian Parliament Speaker Mohammad Bagher Ghalibaf warned that Tehran was monitoring all enemy movements and threatened retaliation against regional countries supporting Washington.

"Our forces are monitoring all enemy movements, and if they take any step, all the vital infrastructure of that regional country will be targeted," he said.
