

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

FRIDAY, JUNE 20, 2025

HEATHER DIEHL FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

A CELEBRATION OF JOY AND RESISTANCE

Roxbury's Juneteenth celebration on Thursday featured a parade, historical programs, music, crafts, and more. Above, dancers with Major Hype performed during the parade. At right, Samuel Tugbiyele, 12, of Lowell, worked on an image he called "Power Through Pressure" at the Museum of the National Center of Afro-American Artists. The day commemorates the ending of slavery in the United States. B1.

PAT GREENHOUSE/GLOBE STAFF

He followed the rules and now he's stuck

Student returned to India, then the US restored his status, but he's still locked out

By Brooke Hauser
GLOBE STAFF

"Lost and forgotten." That's what one neuroscience student from India fears he will become.

The 26-year-old PhD candidate had been studying in Boston and was halfway through his program this spring when the United States government suddenly terminated his legal status, along with that of more than 6,500 other international students and scholars. His visa was also revoked, he learned the same day.

It was April 2. The week before, masked agents had arrested Tufts University student Rümeysa Öztürk on a Somerville street.

"A lot of people got scared," said the student, who asked not to be named for fear of reprisal.

Some foreign students made the wrenching decision to drop everything and leave. The PhD student was among them. He bought a one-way ticket from Boston to Mumbai and left April 5.

What these students couldn't have known: The federal government would soon restore most international students' statuses in its Student and Exchange Visitor Information System, or SEVIS, database, run by US Immigration and Customs Enforcement, making these students lawful in the United States once again — as long as they didn't leave.

The problem, immigration lawyers said, is that the State Department did not automatically restore their visas, which allow international travel. With a revoked visa, anyone who leaves and tries to come back could be stopped by airport officers and barred from reentering the United States, or risk getting stuck abroad because of security delays.

Back in India, the PhD student applied for a new visa May 9 but got denied two weeks later. He has an "active" status in the SEVIS database, "as though the termination did

VISA, Page A6

Beyond projecting military strength and pledging unity, a more pressing theme has emerged for next week's NATO summit: Keep President Trump happy. A3.

The super PACs backing Mayor Michelle Wu and challenger Josh Kraft have been spending generously in Boston's mayoral race. B1.

An appeals court backed President Trump's control of the California National Guard amid protests. A4.

Sol mates

Friday: Sunny, windy. High: 83-88. Low: 65-70.

Saturday: Some sun. High: 81-86. Low: 69-74.

Sunrise: 5:07 Sunset: 8:24 Comics and Weather, G6-7.

Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 307, NO. 171

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

Ex-trooper's other cases scrutinized

Defense lawyers seek records of Read investigator

By Laura Crimaldi
GLOBE STAFF

The murder of a Cohasset mother on New Year's Day in 2023. The fatal shooting of a man riding a moped through Milton on a summer evening. Deadly gunfire outside a club in Randolph.

Former Massachusetts State Police trooper Michael Proctor, who was fired over crude and misogynistic texts he sent about Karen Read, investigated those murders and more during his years with the Norfolk district attorney's office.

Now those cases are coming under greater scrutiny, as defense lawyers dig into his misconduct in the investigation into the death of Boston Police Officer John O'Keefe, Read's boyfriend, as they prepare for trials in other murder cases he handled.

They have asked judges to grant them access to Proctor's work and personal cellphones, his work iCloud account, and disciplinary records for him and some State Police colleagues and supervisors in the office of Norfolk District Attorney Michael W. Morrissey, court records show.

Proctor did not testify in the retrial of Read, who was acquitted Wednesday of any responsibility in the 2022 death of O'Keefe, after a mistrial last year. But his role in the initial Read investigation could tarnish his other work.

"I believe that the district attorney's office is going to find it harder and harder to run away from Proctor in the other cases that Proctor was involved in," said attorney Rosemary

READ, Page A7

75 years ago, Malcolm X sought a pardon in Mass.

Discovery of old files could offer state a new chance

By Sean Cotter
GLOBE STAFF

He didn't offer a reason why the governor should grant him a pardon. His application just included his signature and that of his sister, who was vouching for his release from prison.

Over a few months beginning in late 1950, a range of officials up to the governor reviewed the request. In one report, a bureaucrat described the 25-year-old Black man as having become "unnecessarily race-conscious" while behind bars. Ultimately, Governor Paul Dever did not grant the application, and the man then known as Malcolm Little would have to serve out the rest of his eight-to-10-year prison term.

Just two years later, after being released on parole, that man would become widely known as Malcolm X.

Nearly 75 years later, the pardon file for the future civil rights leader surfaced amid a routine renovation of a state government building. The documents provide a snapshot of the budding activist during a formative time. By the time of the report, he had converted to Islam in prison and begun advocating about racial issues.

The discovery of the documents also provides an opportunity, according to the Governor's Council member whose staff found them, for the state to take a small step to acknowledge a historic wrong.

Terrence Kennedy, the council member and a longtime defense attorney, said Governor Maura Healey's office should grant the pardon request posthumously for Malcolm X. The sen-

MALCOLM X, Page A7

JONATHAN WIGGS/GLOBE STAFF

Arjun Collins (left) and his father, Rodnell P. Collins, at the Malcolm X-Ella Collins House. The men are descendants of the civil rights leader.

Trump sets a window for Iran decision

Missile hits hospital in Israel; EU plans talks

By Adam Rasgon, Natan Odenheimer,
Tyler Pager, and Michael Levenson
NEW YORK TIMES

JERUSALEM — An Iranian missile struck a large hospital in southern Israel on Thursday, causing widespread damage and injuring several patients, as President Trump said he would decide "within the next two weeks" whether to join Israel's bombing campaign against Iran to stop its nuclear program.

"Based on the fact that there's a substantial chance of negotiations that may or may not take place with Iran in the near future, I will make my decision whether or not to go within the next two weeks," Trump said in a statement read aloud by the White House press secretary, Karoline Leavitt, in a news conference.

The apparent pivot from Trump bought the American president time and space for further diplomacy to confront the war that has been raging since last Friday, when Israel launched waves of strikes on Iran, including the capital, Tehran. Iran soon retaliated with missile and drone attacks on major Israeli cities, including Tel Aviv.

Trump's comments also came as European officials planned to host a meeting with Iranian officials on Friday in Geneva in an effort to deescalate the conflict. Israeli and US officials were not expected to take part, leaving the Europeans under no illusions that the gathering would have an immediate effect on the war.

A spokesperson for Iran's Foreign Ministry, Es-mail Baghaei, said the talks would focus on "the

MIDEAST, Page A5

An unlikely pair oppose the debt limit

But president, Warren also unlikely to get their wish

By Jim Puzzanghera
GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — With the clock ticking once again on the need to raise the nation's debt limit, an unusual political alliance has formed to try to end these economically damaging showdowns for good.

First, there is President Trump, who called in a Truth Social post this month for the debt limit to be "entirely scrapped to prevent an economic catastrophe."

Then there is Senator Elizabeth Warren. She has been pushing the same message for years after repeated standoffs orchestrated by congressional Republicans over hiking the limit have led to US credit rating downgrades.

"It is possible that hell has frozen over," the Massachusetts Democrat wrote in a New York Times opinion article eight days later, trying to seize the momentum. "President Trump and I agree on something very important: Abolish the debt limit."

Their reasons for targeting a mechanism that has become outdated in the hyper-partisan political environment are different, of course.

DEBT LIMIT, Page A6