

Chicago Tribune

QUESTIONS? CALL 1-800-TRIBUNE

FRIDAY, JANUARY 16, 2026

BREAKING NEWS AT CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

Invoking Insurrection Act threatened

Trump cautions he will deploy troops on Minn. protesters

By Steve Karnowski, Alanna Durkin Richer, Hallie Golden and Aamer Madhani
Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — President Donald Trump on Thursday threatened to invoke an 1807 law and deploy troops to quell persistent protests against the federal officers sent to Minneapolis to enforce his administration's massive immigration crackdown.

The threat comes a day after a man was shot and wounded by an immigration officer who had been attacked with a shovel and broom handle. That shooting further heightened the fear and anger that has radiated across the city since an Immigration and Customs Enforcement agent fatally shot protester Renee Good in the head. Trump has repeatedly threatened to invoke the Insurrection Act, a rarely used federal law, to deploy the U.S. military or federalize the National Guard for domestic law enforcement, over the objections of state governors.

"If the corrupt politicians of Minnesota don't obey the law and stop the professional agitators and insurrectionists from attacking the Patriots of I.C.E., who are only trying to do their job, I will institute the INSURRECTION ACT, which many Presidents have done before me, and quickly put an end to the travesty that is taking place in that once great State," Trump said in social media post.

Presidents have invoked the law more than two dozen times, most recently in 1992 by President George H.W. Bush to end unrest in Los Angeles.

In that instance, local authorities had asked for the assistance.

Minnesota Attorney General Keith Ellison responded that he would challenge any such action in court.

He's already suing to try to stop the surge by the Department of Homeland Security, which says it has made more than 2,000 arrests in the state since early December. ICE is a DHS agency.

"I'm making a direct appeal to the President: Let's turn the temperature down. Stop this campaign of retribution. This is not who we are," Minnesota Gov. Tim

Turn to Threat, Page 10

Spiritual elder Oshuntaye Brown, left, hugs Lakiesha Infarinu Williams, known as "Mama Africa," as other members of the American Association of Brazilian Candomblé and Culture sing and drum at a party and fundraiser in Williams' store, Mama Africa's Marketplace, in the South Shore neighborhood of Chicago on Sunday. Williams' son, Godly, 2, is on her back. EILEEN T. MESLAR/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Obama Center boosts appeal of South Shore

Some worry increased investments mean longtime community spaces will be lost

By Madeline King
Chicago Tribune

Dozens of dancers, drummers and spectators filled Mama Africa's Marketplace in South Shore for a spiritual ceremony in support of the shop and community space.

Between the music and prayer, visitors shopped among the rows of colorful beaded jewelry, traditional African clothing and woven river grass baskets. They came to the ceremony primarily for one reason: to "Save Mama Africa's Marketplace" from its likely closure.

"I always looked for a space where I can be loved and included," Lakiesha Infarinu Williams, also known as "Mama Africa," said last weekend to ceremony attendees. "To know there's so many people who have found that here just means so much to me."

Williams became Mama Africa to many in her community five years ago when she opened the marketplace in the 71st Street business corridor. Since then, the 43-year-old mother of four said she has cultivated a "neutral space where all people are welcome," and sells African products mostly on consignment from around 30 U.S. and African vendors.

But now, Williams will have to close Mama Africa's Marketplace at the end of the month. According to Williams, her landlord plans to sell the building at 2100 E. 71st St. She's trying to come up with the thousands of dollars needed to either buy the building or move to a new location and cement the future of her story.

Her experience mirrors broader trends in the increasing appeal of South Shore properties, propelled in part by the construction of the Obama Presidential Center just 2 miles away, according to community members and experts.

"This is the first time in decades — or actually, in my lifetime — that I've seen significant investment on the South Side of Chicago, and most importantly, this close to the South Shore community," said Tonya Trice, executive director of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce.

Turn to South, Page 4

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

20 indicted for alleged gambling, game-fixing

2 former DePaul players accused of fixing first half of 3 Big East games

By Colleen Kane
Chicago Tribune

Two former DePaul men's basketball players were among 20 people indicted Wednesday in an alleged gambling and game-fixing scandal that spans more than a dozen college teams.

Former Blue Demons guard Jalen Terry and forward Da'Sean Nelson are accused of fixing the first halves of games by underperforming in Big East games in February and March 2024. Forward Micawber "Mac" Etienne also is named in the indictment, which says he is charged elsewhere. A fourth DePaul player, named only as "Person #6," also is alleged to have been involved.

The indictment lists a Feb. 24 game against Georgetown, a March 2 game against Butler and a March 5 game against St. John's as games that potentially were affected. DePaul lost all of those games, part of its record 39-game Big East regular-season losing streak.

The games in the indictment were played after DePaul fired coach Tony Stubblefield in January 2024. Matt Brady, currently an assistant coach at Boston University, was the interim coach.

The Blue Demons finished that season 3-29 overall and 0-20 in the Big East. DePaul hired former Ohio State coach Chris Holtmann shortly after the season ended in March 2024.

DePaul said in a statement

Turn to Indictments, Page 2

INSIDE

E. JASON WAMBSGANS/TRIBUNE

'Cubs wanted our family to be here'

Alex Bregman's life centers around two things: his family and winning games. Those were the driving forces that ultimately led him to the Cubs. Plus, Paul Sullivan on how the long, strange free-agent trip for Bregman — and Scott Boras — ends in Wonderland. Chicago Sports

SUDDEN REVERSAL: Trump administration restores millions in mental health grants for Illinois after day of confusion. Business

LIVE STORYTELLING: Standing at a microphone telling a story can be a very personal kind of theater, and it has a strong foothold locally. A+E

Bally's Chicago pushes back opening to 2027

The company seeks 12-month extension on temporary casino

By Robert Channick
Chicago Tribune

Bally's Chicago may not be opening its new permanent casino this year after all.

With its already extended temporary license to operate at Medinah Temple set to expire in September and construction of the new casino complex racing the clock, state Rep. Kam Buckner introduced a bill Thursday to add up to another 12 months to the temporary license.

That would give Bally's Chicago until September 2027 to open its new $1.7 billion casino, hotel and entertainment complex rising up on the 30-acre former site of the Tribune's Freedom Center printing plant in the River West neighborhood.

"Bally's Chicago remains fully committed to the construction of its permanent casino and entertainment destination and will continue operating at Medinah Temple in accordance with all regulatory requirements during the extension period," Christopher Jewett, senior vice president of corporate development for Bally's, said in a statement. "The adjusted timeline allows for Bally's Chicago to operate the temporary casino inside of

Turn to Bally's, Page 6

Construction continues on the Bally's Chicago casino at the former Freedom Center printing facility site along the Chicago River on Jan. 7. ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

TODAY'S WEATHER

High 37 Low 13

Complete Chicagoland forecast on Page 14

$4.00 city and suburbs and elsewhere
178th year No. 16 © Chicago Tribune

