

Onslaught of tariffs ripples across globe

Percent change in global market closing values since Inauguration Day

In Europe's eyes, yet another blow to a key alliance

BY ANTHONY FAIOLA,
STEVE HENDRIX
AND ELLEN FRANCIS

ROME — In announcing plans in 1947 to rebuild post-World War II Europe, U.S. Secretary of State George C. Marshall linked security with economics. Without the United States doing whatever it could to promote “normal economic health in the world,” he said, “there can be no political stability and no assured peace.”

Nearly 80 years later, America's closest allies in Europe see President Donald Trump's tariffs as another blow to a fast-fracturing Western alliance that had stood as the most successful peace project of modern times — one whose pillars included shared democratic values, a strategic goal to contain Moscow, as well as flourishing flows of trade and investment.

Trump, casting the United States as besieged by friend and foe, has called the European Union a bloc formed largely to “screw” the United States; has threatened to “get” Greenland — a Danish territory; and stoked European fears by signaling warmer ties with the Kremlin. Trump's announcement Wednesday of sweeping “America First” tariffs is effectively forcing Washington's closest European allies to bend a knee with everyone else; countries that fought alongside the United States in myriad

SEE EUROPE ON A9

Everyday goods: Price hikes will hit immediately on coffee, cars. A6

North America: New levies mark the end of an era for free trade. A7

Reeling: U.S. friends and foes united in outrage, confusion. A8

Tariff rates: Economists say the formula doesn't make sense. A10

GRAPHICS BY NICK MOURTOUPALAS/THE WASHINGTON POST; PHOTO BY JUSTIN LANE/EPA-EFE/SHUTTERSTOCK

The scene Thursday at the New York Stock Exchange as trading gets underway. Economists warn that a recession is becoming more likely.

Fear of fallout from Trump's trade war leaves some Republicans in a bind

BY MARIANNA SOTOMAYOR
AND THEODORIC MEYER

President Donald Trump's announcement of steep new tariffs on foreign allies and rivals alike triggered a stock market sell-off Thursday, upping the pressure on some Republican lawmakers caught between loyalty to the president and unease about the political impact of his plans.

The uncertainty over how Trump's tariffs will affect the U.S. economy is putting a GOP-led Congress in a bind, as politically vulnerable lawmakers will ultimately pay the price of his decisions. Wednesday's sweeping announcement also is starting to drive a wedge between the two chambers, with House Republicans largely standing by the president while some in the Senate are working to reclaim Congress's constitutional authority to levy tariffs.

Hours after global stock markets tumbled, Sens. Chuck Grassley (R-Iowa) and Maria Cantwell

(D-Washington) introduced a bill Thursday requiring Congress to approve any tariffs within 60 days of their proposal by the president. The legislation would also mandate that the White House provide an analysis of tariffs' impact on businesses and consumers.

“For too long, Congress has delegated its clear authority to regulate” tariffs, Grassley said in a statement. He argued the bipartisan bill would “reassert Congress' constitutional role and ensure Congress has a voice in trade policy.”

Sen. Thom Tillis (R-North Carolina) said he would back Grassley's bill if it came up for a vote, but other Republicans expressed skepticism that it could garner enough support to pass. Many Republicans have cheered the new tariffs, and it's unclear whether Grassley's bill will even get a vote on the Senate floor.

“I think [Trump has] been pretty clear he wants to negotiate,” Sen. James Lankford (R-Okla.)

SEE REPUBLICANS ON A5

Trump ousts NSC staffers after visit from far-right ally

BY ELLEN NAKASHIMA,
JOHN HUDSON
AND MICHAEL BIRNBAUM

The White House fired at least five key aides on the National Security Council staff Thursday, a day after the far-right activist Laura Loomer visited the Oval Office and urged President Donald Trump to remove certain people whose views she deemed disloyal.

The firings, occurring barely two months into Trump's return to Washington, marked the first major culling of Republican political appointees in his nascent second term, and people with knowledge of the shake-up said the number of dismissals could grow. They spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss the president's personnel decisions.

It appeared Thursday's action

SEE NATIONAL SECURITY ON A2

After a ban, a trans girl competes with the boys

A Fairfax high-schooler resolves to keep participating in the face of a Trump executive order

BY KARINA ELWOOD

Eliza Munshi knelt on her bedroom floor curling her lashes. She dabbed glitter into the corners of her eyes and debated whether to tie her hair into one French braid or two. She slipped on her green jersey and headed to her first track and field meet.

At Falls Church High School, she waited for a practice throw in the discus event, taking her place in a line of boys. Runners passed by on the track. Coaches hovered nearby. Eliza was nervous, but in the way that any teen might be before their first competition in a new sport.

This wasn't how Eliza imagined it would go when she tried out for track in February.

But that month, President Donald Trump signed an executive order banning transgender girls like Eliza from competing on girls' and women's sports teams. Days later, the

SEE ELIZA ON A18

ALLISON ROBBERT/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Eliza Munshi waits in line to throw the discus at a track meet March 19 in Falls Church, Virginia.

Deep angst at a Social Security office, where falsehoods fly

BY ANNIE GOWEN

DES MOINES — They began lining up two hours before the Social Security office opened — huddled against a sharp April cold, clutching convenience store coffees, the steam rising in chill coming off the river that flows through Des Moines.

Some carried files of important documents — an original of a marriage or birth certificate, a Medicare application — or print-outs of forms they couldn't seem to manage to submit online.

Many expressed worry about the upcoming changes at the Social Security Administration and how those might affect the benefits it provides 73 million disabled, elderly or young Americans. For 40 percent of seniors, that monthly check is their sole source of income.

While President Donald

SEE SOCIAL SECURITY ON A14

IN THE NEWS

A destructive path A deadly storm tore across the central U.S. and spawned tornadoes, high winds and flooding, and the threat of severe weather will continue for days. A2

Federal workers A judge ordered the Trump administration to continue reinstating probationary employees who were fired. B1

THE NATION
Laws to ban Pride flags in government buildings are being considered in a dozen-plus states. A3
Mehmet Oz won approval to lead the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services. A3

THE WORLD
In NATO talks, the White House is putting the onus on Europe to defend itself. A11
As Netanyahu visited Budapest, Hungary said it will withdraw from the ICC. A12

THE ECONOMY
A Tinder feature allows you to flirt with AI chatbots, but they fail to capture the complexity of human emotions. A13
Billions of dollars in clean energy projects have been canceled since President Donald Trump began his second term in office. A14

THE REGION
A tribe in Virginia filed a federal lawsuit accusing the state and the governor of undermining its health system. B1
The D.C. police are forming a unit of detectives and investigators who will focus on youth crime, officials said. B1

STYLE
Bruce Springsteen will release seven “lost” albums with dozens of tracks that have never been made public. C1
WEEKEND
A blockbuster? Dropping stars into a blocky video game world, “A Minecraft Movie” loudly celebrates creativity.

BUSINESS NEWS.....A13
COMICS.....C5
OBITUARIES.....B4
OPINION PAGES.....A15
TELEVISION.....C4
WORLD NEWS.....A11

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post
Year 148, No. 54176

