

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MONDAY, MARCH 30, 2026

Limits on care for trans youth stir unease

Fearing end to treatments, families scramble to make contingency plans

By Sarah Rahal and Marin Wolf
GLOBE STAFF

As the Trump administration pushes forward rules to restrict gender-affirming care for transgender youths, some providers, including two in Massachusetts, have already stopped providing treatments, raising fears among some local families that even a state with strong legal protections may not be able to guarantee access.

Fenway Health, the state's largest LGBTQ health provider, stopped offering hormones and puberty blockers for minors in October. Baystate Health in Western Massachusetts followed in February. Other providers are weighing whether they can continue offering care as lawyers warn of growing legal and financial risks.

The result is a growing sense of unease. Families who once arrived in Massachusetts seeking permanence are now making contingency plans. Some say they understand that hospitals have been put in an impossible situation. Others have filed discrimination lawsuits against the hospitals in an effort to continue care.

"I'll always find a way to keep my daughter safe," said Lisa Thornton, who has considered leaving the country for Colombia. She spent her life savings moving herself and her daughter to Boston from Florida in

GENDER, Page A7

Health concerns precede World Cup

Hospitals, officials prep for range of potential afflictions

By Sarah Rahal and Jason Laughlin
GLOBE STAFF

Ahead of the World Cup, state health leaders say they are relying on a playbook they've used many times before, for blizzards, holiday celebrations, championship games, the COVID-19 pandemic, and the Boston Marathon bombing.

Yet the World Cup dwarfs virtually any other event hosted in the region in decades, spanning 16 North American cities over five weeks and drawing an estimated 2 million fans to Greater Boston. Players and ticket-holders will ricochet across not just the region, but the continent.

"The teams are going from one venue to the next venue, the fans are going from one venue to the next venue," said Jennifer Nuzzo, director of the Pandemic Center at Brown University School of Public Health. "This is truly a global exercise."

And those crowds bring the risk of disease. International fans have bought about 20 percent of tickets, state officials said, raising concerns about imported illnesses, including measles and others rarely seen in the United States, such as cholera and dengue.

The scale and intensity of the World Cup are forcing public health officials to prepare for every-

WORLD CUP, Page A10

Golden goal for homeowners

House rental prices soar as region set to host fans from around the globe

By Andrew Brinker and Camilo Fonseca
GLOBE STAFF

FOXBOROUGH — In a few months' time, the streets of this town will be jammed with traffic, as up to 2 million fans from around the world descend on the Boston area to witness seven highly anticipated World Cup matches at Gillette Stadium.

For the hassle of living near the epicenter of it all, nearby residents may be repaid handsomely. All they have to do is rent out their home for a couple days.

Prices for short-term rentals in Greater Boston have skyrocketed for the weeks in June and early July, when Gillette will temporarily transform into Boston Stadium and host group stage, round of 32, and quarterfinal matches for the world's most popular sporting event.

Airbnbs are fairly scarce and pricey all over Greater Boston. During the first group stage match — Scotland vs. Haiti — on June 13, the average rate for a night in an Airbnb here is $483, $200 more than the same time last year. And if visitors want to stay close to the action, and avoid spending hours in traffic or on a commuter rail train, the cost to stay near the stadium is eye-popping: Air-

$483

The average nightly rate for an Airbnb in Greater Boston during one World Cup match in June, $200 more than the same time last year.

RENTALS, Page A10

PHOTOS BY PAT GREENHOUSE/GLOBE STAFF

OF HOSANNAS AND HUGS

Maryellen Kessinger (left) of Weymouth and Janet Fay Johnson of Hull embraced during exchanges of peace at a Palm Sunday Mass in the Cathedral of the Holy Cross in Boston. At right, Bernadette Wood, visiting with her family from Evanston, Ill., chose a palm before Mass. In Jerusalem, for the first time in centuries Israeli police prevented Catholic leaders from entering the Church of the Holy Sepulchre and celebrating a private Mass on the Christian holiday. A3.

Behind a GOP candidate's pitch

Minogue touts his business acumen, but allegations beset biotech

By Samantha J. Gross
GLOBE STAFF

Michael Minogue has pitched himself as "a new kind of governor" for Massachusetts, a no-nonsense political outsider whom voters can trust to run the state like a business.

His primary evidence: the nearly two decades Minogue spent leading Danvers-based Abiomed, a medical device company he has touted as "a cornerstone of the Massachusetts life sciences ecosystem," and one of the nation's most profitable.

But Abiomed has also faced dozens of serious warnings from federal regulators, allegations of kickbacks and improper marketing, and litigation spurred by the deaths of several patients implanted with an Abiomed heart pump — facts Minogue has either downplayed on the campaign trail or waved off as "misleading headlines."

The US Food and Drug Administration has documented dozens of recalls at the company, including eight during Minogue's 19-year tenure as its chairman, president, and chief executive.

The recalls under Minogue involved power interruptions, a pump failing while a patient was being transported, and pumps being assembled with misaligned parts. In most cases, they involved potential hazards the FDA considered serious but not life-threatening and were considered "Class II," meaning the products aren't pulled from the shelves.

MINOGUE, Page A7

MAJID SAEEDI/GETTY IMAGES

A person on Sunday surveyed a building damaged by a US-Israeli strike on Tehran's commercial district.

Pakistan says it will host talks between US, Iran

By Munir Ahmed, Samy Magdy, and Cara Anna
ASSOCIATED PRESS

ISLAMABAD — Pakistan announced Sunday it will soon host talks between the United States and Iran, though there was no immediate word from Washington or Tehran and it was unclear whether discussions on the monthlong war would be direct or indirect.

"Pakistan is very happy that both Iran and the US have expressed their confidence in Pakistan to facilitate the talks. Pakistan will be honored to host and facilitate meaningful talks between the two sides in the coming days," Foreign Minister Ishaq Dar said after top diplomats from Turkey, Egypt, and Saudi Arabia met in Islamabad.

►The war could unsettle markets for natural gas for years. D2.

Pakistan later said the diplomats had departed for their home countries. Those talks were originally scheduled to continue Monday.

Pakistan's foreign ministry did not answer questions, and Iran's mission to the United Nations declined to comment. Islamabad has emerged as a mediator, having relatively good ties with Washington and Tehran, after what Pakistani officials called weeks of quiet diplomacy.

Earlier, Iran's parliament speaker, Mohammad Bagher Qalibaf, dismissed the

IRAN, Page A6

Simmer breeze

Monday: Warmer, breezy. High 62-67, low 47-52.

Tuesday: Morning showers. High 59-64, low 53-58.

Sunrise: 6:30. Sunset: 7:08.

Weather and comics, D4-5.

Obituaries, C9.

It's not clear how quickly the long lines at airports will dissipate after President Trump signed an order to pay TSA officers. A2.

New England is particularly susceptible to higher gasoline prices because it must import all its fuel. D1.

Federal prosecutors detailed the use of stolen IDs to fraudulently collect almost $1 million in public assistance, leading to the arrest of nine recipients. B1.

The Sox dropped the rubber game of its series with Cincinnati, 3-2. C1.

VOL. 309, NO. 89

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

