HANDS OFF OUR CASH ISAs

RACHEL Reeves was last night warned that axing tax-free saving pots could crash the mortgage markets.

The Chancellor has been lobbied by City bosses in recent weeks about scaling back the tax breaks on cash Isas used by eight million savers each year.

Major firms argue that almost £300 billion sitting in cash Isas would generate better returns – and help Labour's growth mission – if it was instead invested in the much riskier stock market.

Ms Reeves, left reeling this week after the Bank of England slashed its 2025 growth forecast in half, is understood to be open to proposals that include axing or significantly reducing the annual £20,000 cash Isa tax-free allowance. But she has
