

“All the News
That’s Fit to Print”

The New York Times

THE WEATHER
Today, cloudy, humid, a couple of showers, high 73. Tonight, scattered showers, cloudy, low 64. Tomorrow, partly sunny, warmer, less humid, high 82. Weather map, Page B10.

VOL. CLXXV No. 60,938

© 2026 The New York Times Company

TUESDAY, JULY 7, 2026

Prices in Canada may be higher

$4.00

Ayatollah Ali Khamenei’s family with his casket on Monday in Tehran, where war-damaged buildings stood near the procession.

TRUMP REMAKING JUDICIARY SYSTEM

Loyalists Create Doubts About the Rule of Law

By MATTATHIAS SCHWARTZ

Not long after Emil Joseph Bove III first donned the robe as a federal appeals court judge in September, one of his new colleagues was surprised upon catching a glimpse of the background image on his iPhone. It was the photo of Donald J. Trump, bloodied by a would-be assassin’s bullet in Butler, Pa., with one fist raised in the air.

A former personal lawyer for Mr. Trump, Judge Bove is not the first jurist to hold on to a political memento or two from a past life.

But the Butler photo, which was described by three people with knowledge of it, caused discomfort on the close-knit 14-seat appeals court for Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware. It touches on a central question about Judge Bove, who before joining the bench was known as an attack dog for Mr. Trump: whether his loyalty to the president might override his commitment to the rule of law.

Those concerns echo a broader issue facing the country’s judiciary, as Mr. Trump fills the 13 courts of appeal with judges who have voted overwhelmingly for his agenda. About a third of federal appellate judges are now Trump appointees.

Some of those who have worked closely with Judge Bove on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, and who spoke on the condition of anonymity to describe internal matters, said the answer in his case is not yet clear. They offered a nuanced picture of how the young judge, 45, is acclimating to his new role. His jurisprudence has been broadly aligned with White House policies on diversity and immigration, but he has not yet ruled on a case that clearly involves Mr. Trump’s personal interests.

Beyond the photo on his phone, which has not been previously reported, Judge Bove has drawn public criticism for attending one of Mr. Trump’s campaign-style rallies in December. The incident led to an ethics complaint that is being considered by the chief judge of an appeals court.

Nancy Gertner, a retired federal judge, said Judge Bove’s attendance

Continued on Page A11

INTERNATIONAL A4-9

Trump’s Clash With Saudis
Security concerns in the wake of the U.S.-Israel-Iran war have altered the crown prince’s priorities. PAGE A8

Rebel Catholics Defy Vatican
Many followers of bishops excommunicated by Pope Leo XIV have refused to renounce them. PAGE A4

BUSINESS B1-5

A Stadium and an Economy
High growth rates and surging exports mask frustrations in Vietnam, an ambitious country where the world’s largest soccer arena is being built. PAGE B1

Waterway Differences
As Oman and Iran consider collecting fees in the Strait of Hormuz, looking to the example of the Strait of Malacca is of limited usefulness. PAGE B1

Xbox Lays Off Thousands
The trims to the video game division were part of wider cuts at Microsoft, as the company prioritizes spending on artificial intelligence. PAGE B1

ARTS C1-6

Lending a Hand on ‘Elle’
June Diane Raphael has her palms read and discusses her future in her role as the mother to the title character in the “Legally Blonde” prequel. PAGE C1

Minimizing the Struggle
One view of the American Revolution recasts the struggle as “less American and less revolutionary.” PAGE C1

SCIENCE TIMES D1-8
At Odds Over Assisted Spelling
The method of communication for non-speaking autistic people has ignited a debate about its effectiveness. PAGE D1

NATIONAL A10-20

Platner to ‘Reflect’ on His Path
Graham Platner, the Democratic Senate nominee from Maine, denied an allegation of sexual assault. PAGE A16

Scrutiny for a Regulator
An Interior Department official may have expedited a permit for her family’s business to breed animals. PAGE A10

SPORTS B6-10

Major Fashion Statements
Naomi Osaka’s prematch outfits at Grand Slam events have drawn notice. At Wimbledon, so has her play. PAGE B6

2,300 Miles the Hard Way
Kelsey Pfendler is thought to be the first U.S. woman to row from California to Hawaii, in 43 days. PAGE B10

OPINION A22-23
Joanne Lipman PAGE A23

Mourning Amid Change and Unease in Tehran

By ABDI LATIF DAHIR

TEHRAN — Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, Iran’s slain supreme leader, had seemed immovable for decades, a man whose authority had become so deeply woven into Iran’s political and religious life that imagining the country without him felt almost impossible.

Now Tehran — the capital from which he ruled, where he was killed and which had shaped his life — is the center of his final journey, filled with mourners for funeral ceremonies taking place across several days, which are part farewell, part spectacle and part turning point.

For Patriarch’s Funeral, Rituals of Pomp and the Scars of War

In the days leading up to the first public mourning, the city changed. First gradually, and then all at once, in the way cities often change before moments of consequence.

Families from provincial towns rolled into Tehran, joining masses who revered Ayatollah Khamenei as patriarch and guardian of the Islamic Republic, an order that so many others had

Continued on Page A9

PAGEENTRY Millions turned out, but some Iranians were dismayed by the extended funeral. PAGE A9

Trump Defends Call on Ban as Soccer World Jeers

By ERICA L. GREEN and TARIQ PANJA

WASHINGTON — President Trump on Monday defended his decision to request that FIFA review a ban issued to a star player on the U.S. men’s soccer team, saying he was motivated to make the extraordinary intervention because he felt that a “suspect” referee made a bad call.

Mr. Trump called Gianni Infantino, the president of FIFA, in

Scrutiny on FIFA After U.S. Star’s Reprieve

the hours after the United States men’s soccer team played on Wednesday and asked him to review the suspension of the team’s top goal scorer in the World Cup, Polarin Balogun, after he was given a red card.

On Sunday, FIFA reversed the decision, a remarkable development that has roiled the soccer world and brought renewed scrutiny to the close relationship between Mr. Trump and Mr. Infantino.

“I didn’t tell him what to do; I can’t tell him what to do,” Mr.

Continued on Page A18

U.S. VS. BELGIUM Coverage of the World Cup round-of-16 game is at nytimes.com/sports.

Ukraine Innovates Air Defenses. It’s Not Enough.

By SIOBHÁN O’GRADY and LIUBOV SHOLUDKO

KYIV, Ukraine — Ukrainian troops returned home from training in the United States and Germany three years ago adept at the standard way of using the Patriot system so critical to air defenses. But with limited supplies and non-stop Russian barrages, they quickly realized that they would need to rewrite the rules.

So the Ukrainians started to experiment.

For example, each battery, or firing unit, in the mobile surface-to-air Patriot defense system holds interceptors that are launched to stop ballistic missiles midair, before they crash onto the earth. The Ukrainians learned to often fire just one interceptor at incoming ballistic missiles instead of the usual two or more because of shortages of the expensive American-made weapons.

They also set the Patriots to manual mode to avoid automatically firing on targets like slow-moving, inexpensive drones that could be taken down by other means. They learned to shoot down drones with machine guns operated from rooftops, truck beds and helicopters and, more recently, with interceptor drones that can take down the Russian drones midflight.

Ukrainian forces largely reserve the Patriots for trying to stop only the fastest ballistic missiles.

These tactics, described in interviews with Ukrainian air defense commanders and experts, were once viewed as the last resort of a scrappy military with limited resources. But such adaptation is increasingly important as

Continued on Page A6

A mother and daughter after Russia struck Kyiv, Ukraine, Monday.