

Chicago Tribune

$4.00 | FRIDAY, OCTOBER 9, 2026 | CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

CHICAGO MARATHON

Temperatures running high

Conditions for the event are becoming less ideal as climate change warms race days, including Sunday

By Adriana Pérez
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Toward the middle of the day Sunday, as tens of thousands of runners race in the Bank of America Chicago Marathon, temperatures are forecast to climb into the upper 60s to mid-70s.

It's not the worst kind of weather for a long run. But it is unseasonably warm — the normal high for Oct. 11 is 65 degrees — and “it's less than ideal,” said George Chiampas, chief medical and safety officer for the marathon since 2007 and an emergency physician at Northwestern Memorial Hospital.

“Everybody should respect the weather,” he told the Tribune. So organizers are asking participants to heed their warning system's yellow flag for Sunday by adjusting their pace, slowing down and staying hydrated.

Research has identified a temperature “sweet spot” that can optimize runners' performance. But an analysis by nonprofit Climate Central last year found that 190 of 221 global races will see a decline in odds for optimal weather conditions by 2045 — including the eight Abbott World Marathon Majors, one of which is Chicago's — as global temperatures rise from human-caused climate change.

Heat has already disrupted races

See MARATHON on Page A2

Right: Kevin Daliva-Paleczny begins his morning run at Pulaski Park in Chicago on Wednesday. Daliva-Paleczny will be running in the upcoming Chicago and New York City marathons. Daliva-Paleczny actively posts information on weather forecasts and their impact on runners. ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Lincoln Park High School students walk out in support of “Jane Doe” and survivors of sexual violence on the “National Day of Action” on Thursday. E. JASON WAMBSGANS/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

‘We need to be speaking out’

High school and college students across Illinois protest sexual violence

By Kate Perez, Allison Kiehl and Shun Graves
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

By noon Thursday, the normally quiet quad at the University of Illinois Chicago was filled with about three dozen students holding protest signs and passing out flyers condemning sexual violence. A colorful, temporary chalk mural covered the sidewalk outside the Lecture Center Building B with messages such as “We are Jane Doe” and “Stop Victim Blaming” written in eye-catching script.

UIC is one of several campuses in Chicago and around the state where students are protesting after a two-year-old sexual violence case resurfaced last month at Cornell University. A woman referred to as “Jane Doe” filed a civil suit last month after a prosecutor declined to pursue criminal charges against seven men she alleges raped her in 2024 while she was intoxicated at a fraternity party on the Ivy League school's Ithaca, New York, campus.

The reopening of a criminal investigation and appointment of a special prosecutor has shed new light on Cornell's and law enforcement's handling of the case — drawing national headlines and sparking conversations and outrage about sexual violence on campus. The outcry has prompted schools across the country to step up advocacy, resources and support to help students and sexual assault victims cope with the fallout.

This month, Illinois students in particular have seized the moment to raise awareness and speak about the prevalence of sexual assault and how authorities address it.

Thursday's “National Day of Action” prompted hundreds of students at Lincoln Park High School to walk out of class at midday in solidarity with “Stop Sexual Violence” protests at UIC and Southern Illinois University Edwardsville downstate.

Between chants on UIC's quad

Thursday afternoon, student speakers took to a megaphone to talk about the importance of accountability and demand justice in the Cornell sexual violence incident. Nova Mohiuddin, 23, and an organizing member of the UIC student chapter of Chicago Socialist Alternative, was the first to take the mic.

“I think it is important to push back against sexism, especially when so many people are normalizing it,” the fourth-year economics major said. “I think it's now more than ever the time when we need to be speaking out.”

Though women outnumbered

See PROTEST on Page A8

President declares a pause on Iran strikes

Trump ties hiatus to election; USS Lincoln returns to San Diego

By Josh Boak and Aamer Madhani
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump said Thursday that he will not order a resumption of military strikes on Iran before the Nov. 3 midterm elections in the United States.

Trump's announcement was made the same day the USS Abraham Lincoln arrived to its home port in San Diego after a record-long deployment in support of the Iran war. There have been reports of crew stress and poor mental health, as well as supply shortages, including food and hygiene products.

Dozens of sailors stood atop the carrier as it glided past the cityscape of downtown San Diego and neared the dock where cheering families waited, carrying flowers and balloons and ringing cowbells.

Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth flew out to the carrier on Wednesday to give the crew the Presidential Unit Citation, the highest honor a unit can receive that is typically reserved for significant achievement in combat.

Hegseth pushed back against what he said were efforts to turn the “Lincoln into some sort of a symbol, a symbol of dysfunction or a symbol of low morale or a symbol of a failed mission.”

The Navy told lawmakers that eight sailors attempted suicide during the record-setting deployment, though experts say that number is low in a strike group of 6,000 sailors over 10 months.

Trump, while stumping for Republicans this week, has hinted that he was confident that an endgame to the war could come in the days before or after the election, while also hinting that he remained

See IRAN on Page A7

INSIDE

A story of resilience and beating the odds

The Sox's journey from near anonymity to the postseason spotlight has been of a team overcoming odds and ignoring the experts. Sports

Family of slain dad seeks accountability

The family of Silverio Villegas González, who was killed by an ICE agent in Franklin Park, files a claim against the government. Chicagoland, Page A3

Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle announces her 2027 budget proposal during a board meeting on Thursday. Preckwinkle said her proposal would close a $550 million preliminary shortfall. ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Preckwinkle proposes budget with stopgap fixes to plug gap

Cook County faces $550 million shortfall

By A.D. Quig
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle painted a picture Thursday of a perfect storm striking county finances, with nastier weather ahead, while proposing a 2027 budget that will avoid tax increases but lean heavily on one-time fixes to plug a $550 million gap.

Preckwinkle's administration plans to use a series of stopgap measures to help cover operations in lieu of new or increased taxes or layoffs in 2027 to bridge the shortfall left by a mix of federal healthcare cuts, rising employee pay and benefits costs and an expensive legal defeat preventing the county from using transportation “lockbox” dollars on its public safety offices.

While she said 2027 will be “a challenging year,” both Preckwinkle and county commissioners anticipate 2028's budget pressures

See BUDGET on Page A7

SUBSCRIPTION

Visit myaccount.chicagotribune.com or call 312-546-7900 to sign up for a subscription. To place an ad, visit placeanad.chicagotribune.com.

WEATHER FORECAST

TODAY H: 68 L: 59
SAT. H: 80 L: 59
SUN. H: 72 L: 59
FULL WEATHER REPORT PAGE A16

INDEX

Almanac A14
Comics D6-D7
Crossword D7
Editorials A11
Horoscope D6
Nation & World B4
Obituaries A9
Sudoku D7
Television D5

179th year No. 282
© Chicago Tribune

