Attempted suicide decriminalised

FEDERAL DECREE LAW INTRODUCES TOUGHER PENALTIES FOR INCITING SUICIDE

DUBAI
BY ASHFAQ AHMED
Managing Editor

Attempted suicide will no longer be treated as a criminal offence in the UAE under some new amendments to the country's Crimes and Penalties Law, marking a shift towards a more humanitarian approach focused on mental health support, prevention and early intervention.

The UAE Government announced the changes yesterday, as part of a Federal Decree Law that also introduces tougher penalties for encouraging or assisting suicide and revises sentencing provisions in serious murder cases.

One of the most significant changes is the decriminalisation of attempted suicide, removing criminal punishment for individuals who attempt to take their own lives.

Under the revised legislation, such cases will be approached from a preventive, therapeutic and humanitarian perspective rather than through criminal prosecution.

Reducing fear

The government said the move is intended to reduce fear of legal consequences among people experiencing psychological crises, encouraging them to seek timely medical and psychological assistance. The change is also expected to facilitate early intervention, improve access to care and strengthen suicide prevention programmes.

While attempted suicide has been decriminalised, the amendments introduce graduated penalties for individuals who encourage or assist another person in taking their own life.

The severity of punishment will depend on the consequences of the offence. If a person attempts suicide following incitement or assistance but survives without serious consequences, the offender faces detention, a fine or both.

Imprisonment

If the attempt results in permanent disability, illness or an inability to perform personal tasks for more than 20 days, the penalty increases to imprisonment of between three and five years, along with a fine.

Where incitement or assistance results in death by suicide, the offender faces imprisonment of between five and seven years.

Inciting or assisting suicide will be treated as an aggravating
