

Removals to ‘third countries’ can go on

Supreme Court allows deportation policy while litigation continues

BY ANN E. MARIMOW

The Supreme Court on Monday cleared the way for the Trump administration to deport immigrants to countries where they are not citizens, temporarily blocking a decision by a lower-court judge who said migrants must have a “meaningful opportunity” to contest their removal.

The court’s order, which drew a sharp dissent from the three liberal justices, was the latest of several allowing President Donald Trump to move forward with a major change in policy while litigation on the issue continues in lower courts. Each has been made as part of the court’s “emergency docket,” which means they are decided based on truncated court filings, not oral argument, and the justices do not always explain their reasoning.

As part of Trump’s mass deportation efforts, the administration has attempted to send groups of migrants, some convicted of crimes in the United States, to countries other than their own, including to conflict-ridden South Sudan. Four individuals initially filed a lawsuit in Boston on behalf of all migrants potentially subject to third-country removals, saying they are entitled to notice and an opportunity to raise fear-based claims before deportation.

U.S. District Judge Brian E. Murphy in Massachusetts ruled against the administration, temporarily barring such deportations. He later said a planned deportation flight to South Sudan had violated his order. Those migrants have since been held in a makeshift detention facility at a U.S. naval base in Djibouti, enduring health hazards and the threat of rocket attacks.

Justice Sonia Sotomayor, joined by Justices Elena Kagan and Ketanji Brown Jackson, wrote a nearly 20-page dissent.

SEE DEPORTATIONS ON A14

Religious protections: Justices will weigh Rastafarian’s lawsuit. A2

After retaliation, hope for ceasefire

Planes moved from targeted U.S. base

Satellite images obtained from Planet Labs PBC show planes at al-Udeid Air Base in Qatar on June 5 were no longer at the base on June 19. Iran fired missiles at the base on Monday, a day after a U.S. strike on Iranian nuclear facilities.

AFP/GETTY IMAGES

MISSILES FIRED AT U.S. BASE IN QATAR

Trump claims agreement between Iran, Israel

BY KAREEM FAHIM, YEGANEH TORBATI, GERRY SHIH AND RACHEL PANNETT

ISTANBUL — President Donald Trump claimed in a social media post Monday that Iran and Israel have agreed to a ceasefire, hours after Iran fired missiles toward an American air base in Qatar retaliating for U.S. strikes on Iranian nuclear facilities with a less-than-furious attack that caused no casualties.

There was no immediate corroborating announcement from the Israeli government. Iran’s top diplomat said that Iran’s military had halted its operations but appeared to take issue with the framing of the U.S. announcement, writing on social media that there had been no agreement on “ceasefire or cessation of military operations.”

Trump’s announcement followed a streak of social media posts in which he thanked Iran “for giving us early notice” on the missile attack, while also calling it a “very weak response.” A day earlier, he floated the possibility of “regime change” in Iran — prompting White House officials to later explain that the official U.S. posture that it did not strike the Iranian nuclear sites to bring about a regime change had not changed.

With no coordinated statements from Iran and Israel, the contours of what was agreed on were not fully clear. In posts to social media, Iranian Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi wrote that Iran’s military stopped its efforts to “punish” Israel at 4 a.m. local time, but said Israel must do the same. “The final decision on the cessation of our military operations will be made later,” Araghchi wrote.

Trump’s original announcement had called for the ceasefire to be phased in, with Iran halting

SEE IRAN ON A12

Meeting: U.S. attack on Iran might complicate NATO summit. A8

Damage: Assessing the effects of U.S. strikes will take time. A12

GOP infighting: Trump steps up attacks on Rep. Massie. A16

A warning to a top general: ‘You have 12 hours to escape’

BY WARREN P. STROBEL, SOUAD MEKHENNET AND YEGANEH TORBATI

In the hours after Israel launched its first wave of strikes against Iran on June 13, killing top military leaders and nuclear scientists, Israeli intelligence operatives launched a covert campaign to intimidate senior officials with the apparent aim of dividing and destabilizing Tehran’s theocratic regime, according to three people familiar with the operation.

People working for Israel’s security services who speak Persian, Iran’s primary language, called senior Iranian officials on their cellphones and warned them that they, too, would die unless they ceased supporting the regime of Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, Iran’s supreme leader, according to the three people, who spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss clandestine operations. One of them estimated

SEE WARNINGS ON A13

Netanyahu decided on strikes months ago, officials say

BY GERRY SHIH, WARREN P. STROBEL AND SOUAD MEKHENNET

JERUSALEM — In the fall, long before President Donald Trump embarked on an effort to resolve concerns over Iran’s nuclear program through negotiations, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu had already set Israel on the road to war, according to current and former Israeli officials.

After Israel decimated Iran’s air defenses in a missile skirmish and crippled its main ally, Hezbollah, in October, Netanyahu issued a general order to prepare for a strike, the current and former officials said. Israeli intelligence officials began huddling to compile lists of dozens of Iranian nuclear scientists and military leaders who could be targeted for assassination. Israel’s air force began to systematically take out air defenses in Lebanon, Syria and Iraq to clear the skies for future bombing runs against Iran.

SEE NETANYAHU ON A10

After years of service, transgender troops being forced out

Ten facing Trump administration’s ban agonize over the careers they’re on the brink of losing

BY JONATHAN EDWARDS

U.S. Space Force Master Sgt. Sabrina Bruce didn’t know her life was about to change forever when she got into her car last month to head to the Pentagon and reenlist for another six years.

Bruce, 34, was excited to continue a career that had set her on a life-altering path. She’d enlisted in the Air Force in 2013 to escape her gender dysphoria, she said, referring to the medical term for the distress felt when one’s sex assigned at birth does not align with their gender. Instead, she found a culture that empowered her to come out as a transgender woman.

But just before Bruce began the drive to her reenlistment ceremony on May 6, she saw the news on her phone. The U.S. Supreme Court had ruled the Trump administration could execute plans to bar her and thousands of other transgender service members from the armed forces. Despite her intent to keep serving, Bruce

SEE MILITARY ON A20

MATT MCCLAIN/THE WASHINGTON POST

Space Force Col. Bree Fram says she wanted to serve more years but will retire instead.

In N.Y., Cuomo finds many eager to offer second chance

BY SARAH ELLISON

NEW YORK — The room pulsed with hundreds of hotel, casino and maintenance workers wearing “Union Strength Is Built at the Ballot Box” T-shirts like armor against an uncertain economic future. They chanted loudly for the man they once helped push to resign from office in disgrace.

“CUOMO! CUOMO! CUOMO!”

Andrew M. Cuomo stepped onto the stage and welcomed the two powerful unions gathered before him. Four years ago, the workers and their leaders joined a widespread Democratic movement to force Cuomo out of the governor’s mansion amid allegations of sexual harassment from 11 women. But on this day in June, they were trying to help him become New York’s next mayor.

Such reversals are fueling an unlikely resurrection for Cuomo, 67, who polls show is favored in Tuesday’s Democratic primary. Although there is a segment of New Yorkers who will never again support him, many others have set aside their concerns about the former governor, seeing him as the best bet to fight President Donald Trump and reverse Democrats’ woes, according to interviews with more than two dozen voters, elected officials and political operatives involved in the race.

Standing in Cuomo’s way is Zohran Mamdani, a 33-year-old democratic socialist state assemblyman, a relative neophyte running to Cuomo’s left who is making a late surge with help from

SEE CUOMO ON A4

NOTE TO READERS

We have made some changes to the format of the print edition, including moving Health & Science to Mondays and reordering daily sections. For more on these changes, see our editor’s note on A2.

MATT MCCLAIN/THE WASHINGTON POST

William Jamal Wilson cools off in a D.C. park as extreme heat blankets the region. Story, B13

IN THE NEWS

THE NATION

Abortions continued to rise last year in the United States despite restrictions in many states. A4
Texas’s governor vetoed a ban on intoxicating THC products that his lieutenant backed. A5

THE WORLD

Authorities blamed the Islamic State for a suicide attack that killed 25 at a Syrian church. A6
A telescope that promises to see more galaxies than ever before released its first test images. A7

THE ECONOMY

An Oklahoma plant underscores the progress and perils in building a domestic supply chain for rare earth materials. A15
Tesla held its first Robotaxi rides in Austin, marking a tentative, cautious launch of the service. A16

STYLE

The Hall of Excellence, a museum of memorabilia from legendary sports moments, opens its doors in Las Vegas. B1

SPORTS

Jordan Schultz, NFL reporter, views himself as “a new breed of sports journalist.” B7

THE REGION

Congress could oust three green-card holders locally elected to the District’s nonpartisan, unpaid Advisory Neighborhood Commissions. B13
A federal judge ruled that Kilmar Abrego García is eligible for release from criminal custody. B13

|                    |     |
|--------------------|-----|
| BUSINESS NEWS..... | A15 |
| COMICS.....        | B4  |
| OBITUARIES.....    | B15 |
| OPINION PAGES..... | A17 |
| TELEVISION.....    | B6  |
| WORLD NEWS.....    | A6  |

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post
Year 148, No. 54257

