

Trump hails cease-fire after Iran attack

Threat of retaliation sparks questions on terrorism readiness

By Sam Brodey, Jim Puzzanghera, and Tal Kopan
GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — After President Trump ordered extensive strikes intended to destroy Iran's nuclear program, the government in Tehran issued threats that added urgency to the longtime top concern of US national security officials: terrorist attacks on American soil.

But the escalation with Iran unfolded as Trump has refocused the priorities that have dominated Washington since the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks, including by dramatically shifting federal resources toward achieving his goals on immigration and border security.

Since taking office, the Trump administration has directed a significant increase in the number of Federal Bureau of Investigation agents assigned to immigration enforcement actions — taking them off assignments including counterterrorism and white-collar crime.

Nearly half of all agents in the bureau's 25 largest cities are now assigned to immigration enforcement, according to a review of FBI personnel data. The shift reflects a broader focus on border security and immigration enforcement, with the administration prioritizing these issues over counterterrorism and white-collar crime.

SECURITY, Page A6

Iran strikes biggest US base in Middle East after weekend bombing

Map: CHRISTINA PRIGNANO/GLOBE STAFF | Source: Nuclear Threat Initiative, New York Times

Nuclear pride
Iran's program is deeply embedded in its history, culture, and national identity. A7.

Investor jitters
The markets' responses to the attacks, counterattacks, and threats were muted. D1.

EU frustration
Relations between Israel and Europe continue to fray over the Gaza Strip. A7.

Israel, Tehran refrain from confirming halt to fighting; no injuries at US base

By David Rising, Jon Gambrell, and Melanie Lidman
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — President Trump announced that Israel and Iran had agreed to a “complete and total” cease-fire soon after Iran launched a limited missile attack Monday on a US military base in Qatar, retaliating for the American bombing of its nuclear sites. But the status of a possible cease-fire remained unclear as attacks continued Tuesday.

Iran's foreign minister said that as long as Israel stopped its attacks by 4 a.m. local Tehran time Tuesday, Iran would halt its own. But nearly an hour after that deadline, Israel's military warned its public that Iran had launched missiles towards it as sirens sounded. At least one missile interception could be seen over the skies of Jerusalem and warnings of two further attacks followed as day broke.

It's unclear what the detected missile launches would do for the cease-fire's timeline.

Trump's announcement on Truth Social said the cease-fire wouldn't begin until about midnight Tuesday Eastern time. He said it would bring an “Official END” to the war.

Israel did not immediately acknowledge any cease-fire, but there were no reports of Israeli strikes in Iran after 4 a.m. local. Heavy Israeli strikes continued in Tehran and other cities until shortly before that time. Israel in other conflicts has stepped up its strikes just before cease-fires took effect.

“As of now, there is NO ‘agreement’ on any cease-fire or cessation of military operations,” Iranian Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi wrote in a post on X. “However, provided that the Israeli regime stops its illegal aggression against the Iranian people no later than 4 am Tehran time, we have no intention to continue our response afterwards.”

His message was posted at 4:16 p.m. local time. IRAN, Page A6

‘It’s so funny, because he’s a superstar.’

TATUM WELCH, friend of Flagg family

PHOTOS BY BRETT PHELPS FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

A cardboard cutout and articles about basketball star Cooper Flagg decorate a window at Bears One Stop in Newport, Maine.

‘IT’S BECAUSE HE’S A MAINE BOY’

In Cooper Flagg’s hometown, they couldn’t be prouder

By Adam Himmelsbach
GLOBE STAFF

NEWPORT, Maine

In the past year, Maine native Cooper Flagg dominated the US Olympic team in a scrimmage and led Duke to the Final Four. He already has appeared in national commercials, his autographed sports cards have sold for more than $10,000, and on Wednesday the Dallas Mavericks are expected to select him with the No. 1 pick of the NBA draft.

He could become the league's first white American superstar since Larry Bird, but he also is only 18 and would just be finishing his senior year at Nokomis Regional High in Newport if he had not moved up a year to accelerate his pro career. It's been a lot.

So earlier this month, while living with his family in a Los Angeles rental home and preparing for his rookie season, Flagg asked his parents, Ralph and Kelly, if he could go back to Maine to watch his former school's graduation.

Flagg helped lead the Nokomis Regional High boy's basketball team to a Class A state championship in 2022.

He cemented his legacy there by leading the Warriors to the Class A state title as a freshman in 2022. Even though he then transferred to a prep basketball power in Florida, his connection to the region has endured.

“He just said, ‘I feel like it'd be fun to go home and celebrate with the kids I grew up with,’” Kelly said. “I think he was looking at it as like the finality of his childhood, a full-circle moment to go back where it all started.”

Flagg just needed a burst of home. It has FLAGG, Page C2

Lawmakers agree to make process more open, efficient

New State House rules include posting of votes in committee, bill summaries

By Matt Stout
GLOBE STAFF

Massachusetts legislative leaders, vowing to make lawmaking more transparent and efficient, unveiled a deal Monday that would make more of their votes and testimony public and rework their decades-old legislative calendar.

The so-called joint rules agreement is the first Democrats in the Legislature have reached in six years and follows promises to inject more transparency into their operations, which have long been criticized as some of the country's most opaque.

The package released Monday would update the rules governing their chambers and reshape Beacon Hill's cadence in ways both big and small. The proposed changes, which lawmakers are expected to formally approve later this week, also come at a time when Democrats are attempting to fashion themselves as state-level protectors against changes pushed in a Republican-controlled Washington.

Under the agreement, legislative staffers will now produce summaries on all legislation moving through the Legislature. LEGISLATURE, Page A10

High Court lets migrants be sent to third countries

Boston-based judge called for chance for deportees to show risk of torture

By Adam Liptak
NEW YORK TIMES

The Supreme Court on Monday allowed the Trump administration to deport migrants to countries other than their own, pausing a federal judge's ruling that said they must first be given a chance to show that they would face the risk of torture.

The court's order, which potentially cleared the way for the administration to send men held at a US military base in Djibouti on to South Sudan, gave no reasons and said the judge's ruling would remain paused while the government pursues an appeal and, after that, until the Supreme Court acts. The court's three liberal members issued a lengthy dissent.

The order was the latest in a series of rulings related to immigration decided by the justices in summary fashion on what critics call the court's shadow docket. Two allowed the administration to lift protections for hundreds of thousands of people. DEPORTATIONS, Page A10