

Trump's Joe Rogan Problem
REVIEW

WSJ

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL WEEKEND

DOW JONES News Corp  SATURDAY/SUNDAY, JANUARY 17 - 18, 2026 - VOL. CCLXXXVII NO. 14 WSJ.com ★★★★★ $6.00

What's News

Business & Finance

- ◆ Some elite Chinese researchers are coming to the conclusion that their country's chances of catching up to the U.S. in artificial intelligence are slim in the short run, and the gap may even be widening. A1
- ◆ Trump signaled that he may keep National Economic Council Director Kevin Hassett, a top contender for Fed chair, in his current job. A2
- ◆ Major U.S. stock indexes settled lower Friday, and the S&P 500, Dow and Nasdaq were in the red for a week marked by geopolitical and policy developments. B10
- ◆ OpenAI plans to start testing ads in ChatGPT for the first time, a major shift in its business strategy as it seeks new ways to increase revenue. B9
- ◆ Walmart will shuffle its leadership team when John Furner takes over as chief executive next month, setting in motion a large number of internal job changes. B9
- ◆ A co-founder of AI startup Thinking Machines had an undisclosed workplace relationship prior to his firing Wednesday, according to people familiar with the matter. B9
- ◆ Mitsubishi teed up its largest acquisition ever, entering into an agreement to absorb Aethon's shale gas assets in Texas and Louisiana for $5.2 billion. B9

Worldwide

- ◆ Trump's handling of the economy elicited murmurs in a new Wall Street Journal poll that found about half of voters judged conditions to have deteriorated in the past year, compared with 35% who saw improvement. A1
- ◆ The collision of the Trump administration's huge immigration operation and the pushback from residents is leading to a tinderbox in Minneapolis. A1, A4
- ◆ The Justice Department is investigating whether Minnesota Gov. Tim Walz and Minneapolis Mayor Jacob Frey conspired to impede federal immigration officers. A4
- ◆ Trump threatened to impose tariffs on countries that oppose his efforts to annex Greenland, which he says the U.S. must have in the interests of national security. A1, A2
- ◆ Trump purchased up to $2 million of Netflix and Warner Bros. Discovery bonds days the two companies agreed to a deal. A3
- ◆ The Education Department said it would delay plans to garnish the pay of defaulted student-loan borrowers. A5

NOONAN

What's new in Trump Two A13

NOTICE TO READERS

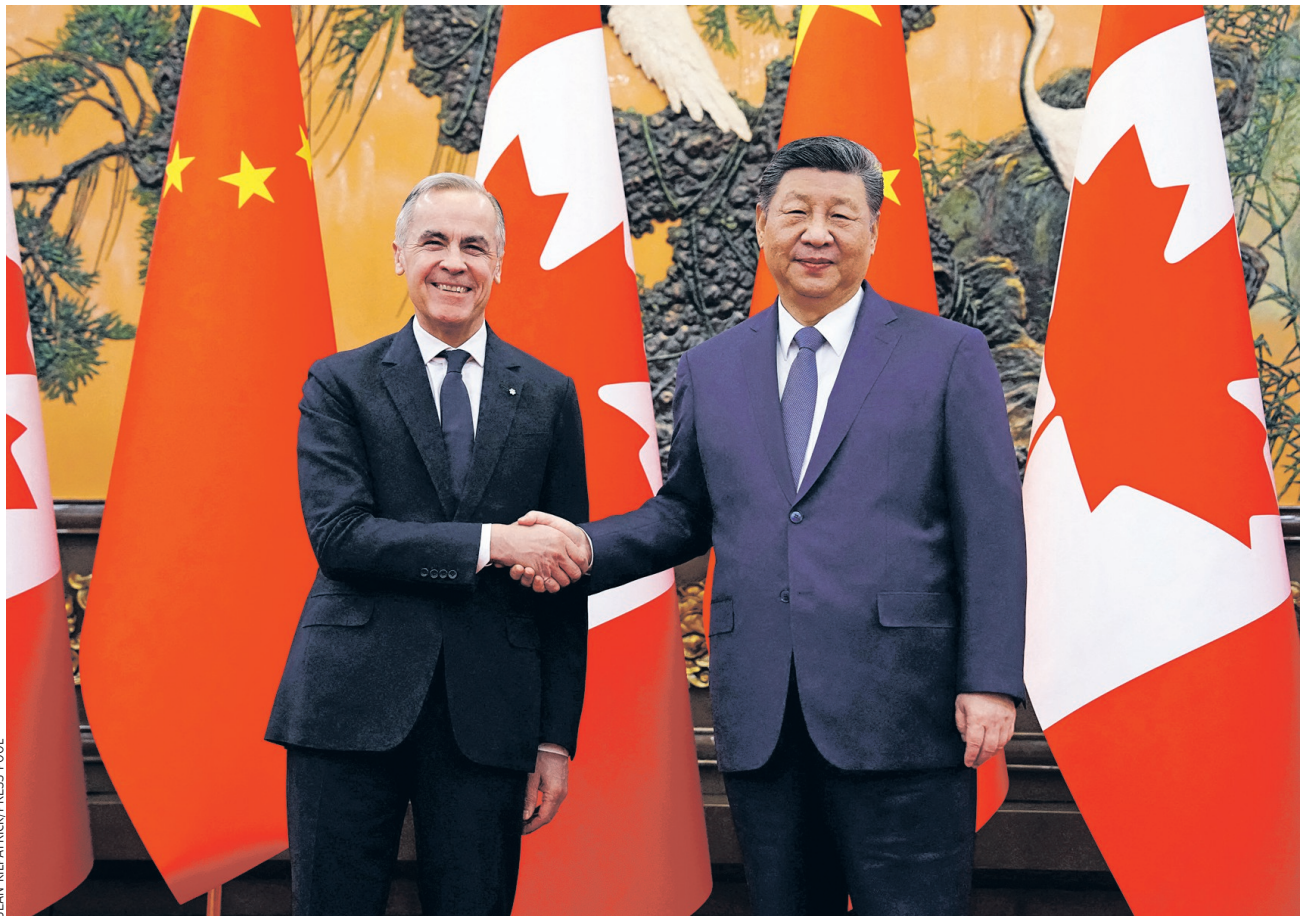

WSJ.com and WSJ mobile apps will publish throughout the weekend. The Wall Street Journal print edition won't be published on Monday, Martin Luther King Jr. Day.

CONTENTS
Obituaries.....	C6
Books.....	C7-12
Opinion.....	A11-13
Business & Finance.....	B9
Sports.....	A14
Food.....	D9-10
Style & Fashion.....	D2-4
Gear & Gadgets.....	D6
Travel.....	D8
Heard on Street.....	B12
U.S. News.....	A2-5
Markets.....	B10
World News.....	A6-8-9

© 2026 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Canada Warms to China After U.S. Trade Spat

NEW FRIENDS: Canada's Prime Minister Mark Carney and Chinese leader Xi Jinping agreed to a 'new strategic partnership' on trade Friday in Beijing. Carney said Canada's close economic ties with the U.S. are over, and China was 'more predictable.' A8

Dimon Seemed to Have Trump Figured Out—Until This Week

Jamie Dimon has worked carefully to rebuild his broken relationship with President Trump. The fight over Fed Chair

By Alexander Saeedy, AnnaMaria Andriotis, Emily Glazer and Brian Schwartz

Jerome Powell is threatening to blow it up again.

The head of JPMorgan Chase, well-known for impassioned stances on policy, had tempered his approach with Trump over the past year, offering overall expressions of support with careful criticism of policy details. It appeared to be working—he had met with the president and White House officials several times to discuss economic policy in recent months.

On Tuesday, Dimon joined the voices publicly warning the administration not to interfere with the Federal Reserve. Ironically, the president had offered him the job as Fed chair months prior during a meeting in the White House, according to people briefed on the discussion, though Dimon took the offer as a joke.

After Powell disclosed Justice Department subpoenas against the Fed, Dimon spoke out in his defense. He said he didn't "agree with everything the Fed has done" but said almost everyone knew that "anything that chips away" at the central bank's independence "is probably not a good idea."

The response from Trump was swift: Dimon is "wrong" and "it's fine what I'm doing, and we have a bad Fed person." "We should have lower rates," Trump said on Tuesday. "Jamie Dimon probably wants higher rates, maybe he makes more money that way."

Dimon, one of the most powerful CEOs in the country, has

Please turn to page A10

◆ Trump seems to downgrade Hassett's Fed chances..... A2

President Eyes Tariffs As Cudgel In Bid for Greenland

By Ken Thomas and Robbie Gramer

President Trump threatened to impose tariffs on countries that oppose his efforts to take control of Greenland.

"I may do that for Greenland, too. I may put a tariff on countries if they don't go along with Greenland because we need Greenland for national security. So I may do that," the president said at the White House on Friday, adding, "that will end up being the story."

Trump said the threat of tariffs against countries such as France and Germany had previously helped him address high prices for prescription drugs. That approach, he said, could help him gain control of Greenland.

Trump has said the U.S. must own the semiautonomous Danish territory of about 57,000 people, which is located immediately northeast of Canada, for the U.S.'s national security. The president has said in recent days that if the U.S. doesn't control Greenland, China or Russia will. The White House hasn't ruled out using force to take the territory.

Denmark and Greenland have said that the island isn't available and that its people don't want to be part of the U.S.

Please turn to page A2

EXCHANGE

LOST LUXURY
Inside the failed scramble to save Saks. B1

ICE Surge, Protesters Turn Minneapolis Into a Tinderbox

MINNEAPOLIS—The collision of the Trump administration's huge immigration operation and the enormous pushback from residents here is leading to a tinderbox.

By Michelle Hackman, Kris Maher and Brenna T. Smith

For locals, much of the anger stems from the clash between the administration's stated rationale for being in the area and the reality on the ground.

They are here, federal officials said, to find "criminal illegal aliens hurting Americans" after a sprawling welfare-fraud scandal involving dozens of Minnesotans of Somali descent.

But residents see massive federal overreach in a place with a relatively small proportion of immigrants in the country illegally compared with other states.

Minnesota's population of immigrants here illegally stands at an estimated 2.2%, about half the national average, according to the Pew Research Center. More than 90% of the state's Somali population, the group highlighted in the fraud investigation, have some sort of permanent legal status, according to the Census Bureau's American Community Survey.

"They are taking people that are working within the system, that are asylum seekers, that are green cardholders," said Dan Engelhart, a northeast Minneapolis resident and commissioner on the city's park board. "It's really

Please turn to page A4

◆ DOJ investigates Gov. Walz, judge limits ICE tactics... A4
◆ Insurrection Act is broad, seldom used..... A4

This Football Cinderella Story Stars a Chain-Smoking Rocker

John Mellencamp has overseen Indiana's transformation from laughingstock to No. 1

By Robert O'Connell

There are a select few ways to become wealthy enough to join the ranks of college football's most powerful boosters.

The late T. Boone Pickens, the chief benefactor for Oklahoma State, built an oil fortune that he dispersed to the Cowboys. Phil Knight, who bankrolls Oregon, turned Nike into an intercontinental empire that transformed the Ducks into a gridiron behemoth.

Hoosier daddy

Then there is Indiana University. The program that opened the season as the losingest team in Division I football history now stands one game away from its first championship—and it hasn't gotten there via the purses-strings of one of the world's richest people. In fact, the Hoosiers' most prominent booster isn't a tech genius or hedge fund titan.

Please turn to page A10

Chinese Developers Fear They Can't Win AI Race

By Raffaele Huang and Tracy Qu

SINGAPORE—After a year of gung-ho news about China's gains in artificial intelligence, some elite Chinese AI researchers are coming to a more pessimistic conclusion. The country's chances of catching up to the U.S. are slim in the short run, they say, because of a bottleneck in chips.

"The truth may be that the gap is actually widening," Tang Jie, founder of the Chinese AI startup Zipu, said at a conference last weekend in Beijing. "While we're doing well in certain areas, we must still acknowledge the challenges and the disparities we face."

One illustration: When the AI chip leader, Nvidia, introduced its next-generation Rubin hardware in January, it named a number of U.S. companies as customers, but no Chinese AI developer was named because U.S. rules block direct sales to China.

Chinese companies have started discussions about renting computing power at data centers in Southeast Asia and the Middle East to get access to Rubin chips, according to people involved in the talks. That follows companies' efforts last year to access chips in Nvidia's Blackwell series.

Deals by Chinese companies to use Nvidia chips in third

Please turn to page A8