Senate hearing about turmoil that has gripped the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and his moves to transform U.S. vaccine policy. The Senate Finance Committee hearing Thursday was peppered with heated exchanges and recriminations between Kennedy and Democrats that included accusations of lying and attempting to mislead the public. Kennedy is aiming to radically remake the nation's top public health agency while some Senate Democrats—as well as current and former CDC employees—have called on him to resign. Kennedy defended his actions during opening remarks. “These changes were absolutely necessary adjustments to restore the agency to its role as the world’s gold standard public health agency,” he said.

Several Republicans on the committee echoed their Democratic colleagues’ concerns about the CDC turmoil and federal vaccine policy. They questioned how Kennedy could praise President Trump, a Republican, for delivering Covid-19 vaccines through Operation Warp Speed during his first term in 2020, while also limiting access to Covid vaccines and ending federal work on mRNA vaccines. Kennedy faced bipartisan criticism for replacing a vaccine-advisory panel with hand-picked critics of vaccines, and senators from both parties sounded the alarm over possible changes to the routine childhood immunization schedule. He rejected assertions that he was taking vaccines away, even as senators pointed to examples of immunocompromised people being denied Covid vaccines under new federal limits on who can get them.

“Robert Kennedy’s primary interest is to take vaccines away from Americans,” said

Fed’s Cook Hit With Criminal Probe By DOJ

Bank governor targeted by Trump denies allegations of mortgage fraud

The Justice Department has opened a criminal investigation into Federal Reserve governor Lisa Cook, issuing subpoenas as part of an inquiry into whether she submitted fraudulent information on mortgage applications, according to U.S. officials familiar with the matter.

By Brian Schwartz, C. Ryan Barber and Will Parker

The initial scrutiny has centered on Cook’s properties in Ann Arbor, Mich., and Atlanta, with investigators using grand juries as part of the probe, the officials said.

The investigation comes on the heels of two criminal referrals from Bill Pulte, the Trump-appointed director of the Federal Housing Finance Agency, who has publicly alleged that Cook engaged in mortgage fraud. President Trump has cited those allegations in his bid to fire Cook and wrest control of a central bank that has historically remained independent.

“The questions over how governor Cook described her properties from time to time...are not fraud, but it takes nothing for this DOJ to undertake a new politicized investigation, and they ap-

Thousands discard unneeded items over single weekend; ‘It’s perfectly good stuff’

By ROSHAN FERNANDEZ

BOSTON—When Peyush Saini moved from India recently to pursue a master’s degree at Boston College, friends told him he wouldn’t need to buy furniture.

All he had to do was check the sidewalks. Thanks to a quirk in Boston’s calendar, it doesn’t cost much to furnish your apartment at this time of year. Just have bug spray ready at home.

Most of the city’s leases begin Sept. 1, meaning thousands of college students pick the same weekend to with a high density of college students but has spread to other areas. For savvy scavengers, it feels like a giant treasure hunt.

“It’s perfectly good stuff,” said 23-year-old Janice Cheng, leaning over a wooden IKEA patio chair found Monday. “It’s nice, and it’s going to be thrown out otherwise.”

Erin Scott’s and Chris Durante’s apartment is filled with items they scooped off the curb this past weekend, including a curtain rod, a cutting board, a functioning Nintendo 64 console, a plant stand and a pair of red sneakers that fit Scott perfectly. Scott even compiled an Allston Christmas wishlist beforehand.

Last year, the couple climbed into a dumpster to

Jokes and Threats by Scion In Uganda Roil a U.S. Ally

Son of the longtime ruler eyes presidency while boasting of torture and challenging Jay-Z to a duel over Beyoncé

By MICHAEL M. PHILLIPS

Gen. Muhoozi Kainerugaba, son and heir apparent of Uganda’s aged president, tends to joke around.

He likened himself to Gandhi, except without the nonviolent streak. He suggested President Trump invite him to Washington to meet “a black man who is more handsome, charismatic and taller than him.” He challenged rapper Jay-Z to a winner-take-Beyoncé duel.

He boasted about torturing the bodyguard of Uganda’s main opposition leader in his basement.

Except that last one wasn’t a joke.

The bodyguard, Edward Ssebuufu, known by his nickname Eddie Mutwe, really was in a basement, being waterboarded, batoned in the groin, whipped on the soles of his feet and jolted with electric shocks, according to three people he told about the ordeal.

Ssebuufu’s captors forced him to kneel and swear allegiance to Muhoozi, who is commander of Uganda’s armed forces, and to his father, President Yoweri Museveni. Muhoozi himself bragged about using Ssebuufu as a “punching bag.”

“I take FULL responsibility for the actions

Armani, Power-Suit Creator, Held The Reins as Conglomerates Rose

By RORY SATRAN

Giorgio Armani, the designer and business mogul who brought subtle Italian luxury to the world stage and conquered Hollywood, died at age 91.

“He worked until his final days, dedicating himself to the company, the collections, and the many ongoing and future projects,” said an announcement by his namesake brand. The company later confirmed he died at his home in Milan.

During his years at the helm, he remained steadfastly independent in a fashion landscape dominated increasingly by conglomerates.

Although he disliked the moniker, Armani was often called “the king of fashion.” In an interview with The Wall Street Journal in 2024, he insisted that the secret to success was his humble, consistent work ethic. He owned a superyacht and homes in New York, Milan, Pantelleria, Antigua, Paris, St. Moritz, St. Tropez, Forte dei Marmi and Broni, but he showed up at the office every morning and ruled his empire with a firm hand.

Armani, who called himself a “designer-businessman,” was the sole shareholder of his company at the time of his death. In 2023, its worldwide revenue was $2.6 billion, across men’s and women’s lines, the Emporio Armani diffusion line, Armani Privé haute couture, interiors, dozens of restaurants, 2,500 retail stores, fragrances and a cult-classic beauty line. Whether it took the form of relaxed suiting, makeup or interior design, his work whispered refinement.

His stylistic innovations included an emphasis on neutral, in-between colors, soft shoulders, and a more relaxed approach to evening looks for men and women. He often drew inspiration from Asian culture in his work; Akira Kurosawa’s 1980
