Freed British-Israeli hostage leads victims of October 7 atrocity in condemning the PM's move to recognise a Palestinian state

By Natalie Lisbona and Andy Jehring

VICTIMS of the October 7 atrocities last night told Keir Starmer there can be no recognition of a Palestinian state until every hostage is free.

Sir Keir's decision to threaten Israel by offering statehood – while terror group Hamas still rules the Gaza Strip and holds 50 captives – sparked another day of ferocious backlash.

An official with Hamas responded to the PM's announcement by joyfully proclaiming that 'victory is closer than we expected'.

But freed British-Israeli hostage Emily Damari led the condemnation of the decision. She warned it 'risks rewarding terror', accusing Sir Keir of a 'moral failure' and being 'on the wrong side of history'.

'By legitimising a state entity while Hamas still controls Gaza and continues its campaign of terror, the Prime Minister is not promoting a solution; he is prolonging the conflict,' she said. 'Recognition under these conditions emboldens extremists and
