

“All the News
That’s Fit to Print”

The New York Times

THE WEATHER
Today, partly sunny, windy, high 51. Tonight, mainly clear early, increasing clouds late, low 36. Tomorrow, plenty of clouds, a bit cooler, high 45. Weather map appears on Page A17.

VOL. CLXXV No. 60,823 © 2026 The New York Times Company SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 2026 Prices in Canada may be higher $4.00

For U.S. Jews, A Hefty Cost To Stay Safe

By RUTH GRAHAM and ELIZABETH DIAS

In the eight years since a gunman killed 11 people at the Tree of Life synagogue in Pittsburgh — the deadliest antisemitic attack in American history — synagogues and other Jewish institutions across the country have gone to great lengths to fortify themselves.

They have hired security guards, installed metal detectors, reinforced locks, bought cameras and established checkpoints. They have logged onto security briefings and participated in training sessions for clergy members specifically focused on preparing for active shooter events.

Outside their walls, however, antisemitic violence and rhetoric have only increased, with tensions ratcheting up further in recent weeks, in the wake of Israel and America’s new war in Iran. Last weekend, two men were beaten outside a restaurant in San Jose, Calif., in an attack police are investigating as a possible hate crime. Three synagogues in Toronto have been sprayed with gunfire in the last several weeks.

And on Thursday, a driver rammed a truck into a large synagogue outside Detroit, dying after an exchange of gunfire with security guards.

The attack was “a targeted act of violence against the Jewish community,” Jennifer Runyan, the special agent in charge of the F.B.I. office in Detroit, said at a news conference on Thursday afternoon.

The suspect was identified by the Department of Homeland Security as Ayman Mohamad Ghaz-

Continued on Page A19

TEHRAN Thousands attended a government-sponsored anti-Israel rally on Friday amid airstrikes.

BEIRUT, LEBANON After an airstrike Friday. Over 800,000 in the country have fled homes, officials say.

Minutes After Conviction, Driver in Fatal Hit and Run Went Free

By TRACEY TULLY

Orlando Fraga-Seruti had spent much of that Saturday night watching baseball with a friend on the jumbo screens that line the walls at the back of the Wild Wild West casino in Atlantic City, N.J. The Giants had beaten the Phillies by one. The Yankees lost to the Rays.

By the time Mr. Fraga-Seruti, 76, left the casino, Saturday had turned into a humid Sunday morning. He was walking along Atlantic Avenue in the dark toward his favorite Dunkin’ Donuts when he was struck from behind by a Toyota 4Runner. The impact thrust him into the air, snapping his neck.

“The guy’s laying out here. He’s twisted up, man,” a passerby shouted at a 911 dispatcher at about 3:30 a.m. on Sept. 4, 2022. A medical examiner would later describe it as a “hangman’s fracture.”

The driver of the vehicle, Harris Jacobs, was 26. He was headed home after a night of barhopping in nearby Margate, according to trial testimony. He pulled over and parked. But after hunching over Mr. Fraga-Seruti’s body twice, he took off, video showed, setting in motion a four-year ordeal for the dead man’s family.

N.J.’s Pardon Approach Devastates a Family

The police used surveillance video from area businesses to track the S.U.V.’s circuitous route through the heart of the city, locating Mr. Jacobs seven hours later in his apartment, just a few blocks north of the crash.

Too much time had elapsed to conduct tests to prove whether Mr. Jacobs was intoxicated. He was charged with fleeing the scene of a fatal accident and faced years in prison.

His first trial ended last May with a hung jury, but in January

Continued on Page A18

U.S. VOWS TO CLEAR KEY SHIPPING PATH DISRUPTED BY IRAN

Oil Shock That May Eclipse the 1970s No Timeline Is Given for Securing Strait

By EMMETT LINDNER

In October 1973, oil-producing countries in the Middle East imposed an oil embargo, among other measures, on the United States and other countries that had supported Israel during the Yom Kippur war.

Gasoline prices skyrocketed, and President Richard M. Nixon took emergency measures to limit consumption. Gas stations rationed supplies, leading to long lines, complaints of price gouging, and what The New York Times called “chaotic” situations. In Europe, some countries banned driving on Sundays, and Japan, heavily dependent on oil imports, declared a state of emergency.

This month, after the United States and Israel attacked Iran, the Iranians began counterattacks on energy shipping and infrastructure. That has led to what experts are calling the worst disruption to oil supplies in history.

Certainly, oil and gasoline prices are soaring. But there’s no sign yet that American drivers will have to line up for fuel or that the government will have to enact new policies like the ones Mr. Nixon’s administration did to try and keep fuel distributed around the country. In a November 1973 speech, he called for Americans to take steps to “include reductions in home heating, reductions in driving speeds, elimination of unnecessary lighting.”

So what makes this one worse?

Many of the hallmarks of the 1973 shock were a result of poor domestic policy decisions, and the hit to supply is far greater now, said Bob McNally, president of Rapidian Energy Group, a research firm. Policies like rationing set off panic buying, creating shortages instead of easing the problem.

The 1973 embargoed oil accounted for about 7 percent of global oil consumption, and targeted only a handful of nations. That meant the United States could still buy some oil from other countries.

Continued on Page A9

This article is by Helene Cooper, Luke Broadwater and Thomas Fuller.

WASHINGTON — The leaders of America’s war effort vowed on Friday to thwart Iran’s attempts to block the Strait of Hormuz, calling Iran’s move on the crucial shipping route “desperation.” But they did not offer any timetable to restore safe navigation for the vast oil exports that had flowed through the channel.

Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth said at a news conference that the disruptions in the strait were “something we are dealing with,” but added, “Don’t need to worry about it.”

The Trump administration has sought to reassure a world lurching into crisis over surging oil prices caused by Iran’s retaliatory attacks on Persian Gulf maritime traffic. Hours earlier, the administration had lifted some sanctions on Russian oil to try to bolster the global supply, dismaying European allies who wanted to continue punishing Moscow for the full-scale invasion of Ukraine.

At the same time, U.S. officials said they were sending more forces to the Middle East, while President Trump continued his bellicose messaging.

“Watch what happens to these deranged scumbags today,” Mr. Trump wrote Friday on social media, shortly after midnight. “They’ve been killing innocent people all over the world for 47 years, and now I, as the 47th President of the United States of America, am killing them. What a great honor it is to do so!”

He did, however, back away from his frequent early calls for the Iranian people to rise up against their rulers. It was an acknowledgment that one of the original goals of the war, to replace the repressive regime, might have been harder than it seemed.

There are government forces in Iran that “go around with machine guns,” Mr. Trump said on Friday morning in an interview with Fox News. “And they say, ‘Anybody

Continued on Page A6

More on the Attack on Iran

RESTRICTIONS The defense secretary disparaged rules for shooting aimed at reducing the risk of civilian harm. News Analysis. PAGE A7

FLIGHT DISRUPTIONS The war has made airspace restrictions in the Middle East an increasingly common challenge for airlines. PAGE B5

MIXED FEELINGS An Iranian American congresswoman wants democracy for Iran, but is wary of President Trump’s war. PAGE A8

Judge Halts Powell Subpoenas In Blow to Trump’s Vengeance

This article is by Alan Feuer, Glenn Thrush and Colby Smith.

A federal judge in Washington threw a major roadblock into a criminal investigation of Jerome H. Powell, the Federal Reserve chair, quashing grand jury subpoenas issued to the central bank by federal prosecutors over renovations underway at its headquarters in Washington.

In a blistering 27-page decision unsealed on Friday, the judge, James E. Boasberg, derided the U.S. attorney’s office in Washington for pursuing a case against Mr. Powell, delivering a serious setback to President Trump in his effort to use the criminal justice system to punish political foes or pursue his agenda. Mr. Powell has long resisted calls from the White House to significantly lower borrowing costs, prompting a litany of attacks that has also included an effort by the president to fire another top official, Lisa D. Cook.

“There is abundant evidence that the subpoenas’ dominant (if not sole) purpose is to harass and pressure Powell either to yield to the president or to resign and make way for a Fed chair who will,” Judge Boasberg wrote.

He continued, “On the other side of the scale, the government has offered no evidence whatsoever that Powell committed any crime other than displeasing the president.”

The ruling was a reminder of the real-world limitations on authority the president has claimed to be nearly boundless. Time and again, judges and juries across the country have rejected what they

Continued on Page A19

ARTS C1-6

1,865 Coats in 15 Minutes

Each night, the Deutsche Oper in Berlin performs an offstage production, too, starring its coat checkers. PAGE C1

Music on a More Serious Note

Kneecap first gained attention for playful antics onstage. The Irish M.C.s now aim to reinvent their image. PAGE C1

BUSINESS B1-6

U.S. Economy Weakens

Growth in the last quarter of 2025 was revised downward, and consumer prices rose moderately at the start of the new year. PAGE B1

QAnon Revels in Epstein Files

Followers of the conspiracy theory say they support their claims of child sex trafficking by elites. PAGE B6

INTERNATIONAL A4-9

Cuba in Discussions With U.S.

The talks, seen as an effort to save President Miguel Díaz-Canel’s government, come amid a fuel crisis. PAGE A5

OBITUARIES A20-21

Times Foreign Correspondent

John F. Burns gained two Pulitzer Prizes in a 40-year career covering the world’s hot spots. He was 81. PAGE A21

An Irish Olympic Hero

Ron Delany won his country’s first and only gold medal in track and field, in 1956. He was 91. PAGE A20

NATIONAL A10-19

8,500 Detainees in a Building

Homeland Security wants to turn a warehouse in Georgia that’s over a million square feet into an ICE “mega-center.” Experts say the design raises health and security concerns. PAGE A12

Sea of Vaccine Misinformation

Pediatricians nationwide are striving to do what’s best for children’s health, while staying supportive in the face of parents’ mistrust and confusion about inoculations. PAGE A10

OPINION A22-23

David Wallace-Wells PAGE A23

SPORTS B7-10

One for the Books, and the Fans

All Shai Gilgeous-Alexander ever wanted was to win for the Thunder faithful, but with a record performance, he gave them much more. PAGE B9

