Nvidia Plans Big OpenAI Outlay

Chip maker to invest up to $100 billion to support data center and power capacity

By BERBER JIN
AND ROBBIE WHELAN

Nvidia and OpenAI, two U.S. giants powering the country's race for AI superintelligence, outlined an expansive partnership on Monday, including plans for an enormous data-center build-out and a $100 billion investment by the chip maker into the startup.

The deal announced on Monday will allow OpenAI to build and deploy at least 10 gigawatts of Nvidia systems for its artificial-intelligence data centers to train and run its next generation of models. That amount of electricity is roughly comparable to what is produced by more than four Hoover Dams or the power consumed by eight million homes.

"This is a giant project," Nvidia Chief Executive Jensen Huang said Monday in an appearance on CNBC, calling OpenAI the "fastest-growing software company in history."

The partnership is a bet on continued model improvements, essentially that investments of hundreds of billions of dollars from investors, companies, governments and Wall Street financiers will create AI models that are smarter than humans. That bet runs contrary to the view of some skeptics who have said model development is hitting a wall.

Nvidia's investment into OpenAI envisions a future where adoption of AI products will continue to surge among users, profoundly transforming society as economies are far more reliant on computing power than they are today.

"The stuff that will come out of this superbrain will be remarkable in a way I think we don't really know how to think about yet," OpenAI CEO Sam Altman said on CNBC.

Shares in Nvidia rose by nearly 4% on the news, pushing its market value to almost $4.5 trillion, the largest in the world.

A $300 billion deal between Oracle and OpenAI that was first reported on by The Wall Street Journal helped push Oracle's value up by more than a third to almost $1 trillion. Both investments underscore how OpenAI has emerged as central to how investors perceive the AI boom.

China Foots the Bill For Waldorf Revamp

Storyed hotel reopens after long saga; buyer in prison, government takes over

By CRAIG KARMIN
AND ALLISON POHLE

Over breakfast at Manhattan's Peninsula Hotel 11 years ago this month, the nattily dressed Chinese businessman got straight to the point. He wanted to buy the legendary Waldorf Astoria hotel.

The two American real-estate executives at the table excused themselves to call the chief executive of Hilton, which owned the 1,400-room slice of New York history. Although brokers had advised the two executives that the property was worth a little more than $1 billion, the three men decided to shoot for the moon.

The Americans returned to the table and told Wu Xiaohui he could have it for $2 billion. They were floored when he countered at $1.9 billion. By the end of the day, they had a handshake deal at $1.95 billion.

So began the strange saga of what may be the most

Are the Fish Sending a Message? Mysterious Spots Baffle Anglers

Redfish with perfect letters and symbols on their tails are all the rage on the water

By JOHN M. CLARKE JR.

Andrew Brown had spent most of his life chasing redfish, a piscatorial prize notable for its fight and unique tail markings.

The 45-year-old angler in Pensacola, Fla., started catching them by flicking live shrimp, sand fleas and finger mullet on a spin rod before he moved on to fly fishing. About eight years ago, Brown began noticing odd spot patterns on their tails.

At first, he caught one with what appeared to have an uppercase "A." Then he spotted a clear letter "E" on another catch. There were also some fish with no spots, which is rare. After five years, between his own catches and other online reports, he had accounted for the entire alphabet and the numbers 0 through 9. There were even smiley faces, Pac-Man symbols and hearts.

He posted the finds on his website and Instagram page, Drum Spots, which quickly amassed a devoted following. "Hearts are the most common spots that appear," Brown said. "It's like they want us to be happy."

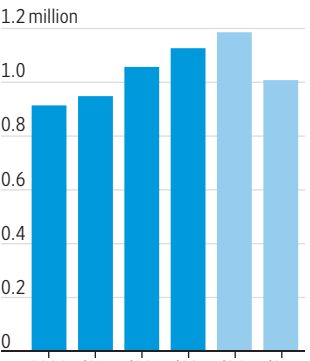

The discoveries have captivated the fishing world and sparked both curiosity and doubt. Some say anglers are simply seeing what they want to see. Then there's the possibility

White House Looks At Argentina Bailout

WASHINGTON—The Trump administration is looking at options to provide Argentina a financial lifeline as the country struggles to overhaul its economy, U.S. Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent said on Monday.

By Brian Schwartz,
Ryan Dubé
and Sam Goldfarb

Bessent, in a series of posts on X, laid out the options administration officials are reviewing to backstop Argentina if the country under President Javier Milei's leadership can't overcome its financial woes.

"These options may include, but are not limited to, swap lines, direct currency purchases, and purchases of U.S. dollar-denominated government debt from Treasury's Exchange Stabilization Fund," Bessent said. He said the administration continues to think "fiscal discipline and pro-growth reforms are necessary to break Argentina's long history of decline."

Argentina's assets rallied after the news. Argentina's Merval Index rose 7.6% while the peso strengthened by more than 4%. The country risk, a measure of investor confidence, dropped sharply after climbing in recent days to its highest level in a year.

Milei, who took office in late 2023, has won praise from President Trump and U.S. con-

Kimmel Show to Return To ABC After Uproar

By JOE FLINT

Jimmy Kimmel's late-night show will resume broadcasting on ABC Tuesday, Disney said, days after it pulled the show indefinitely during controversy over the host's remarks about the killing of conservative activist Charlie Kirk.

"Jimmy Kimmel Live!" has been off the ABC network since Sept. 17, after Federal Communications Commission Chairman Brendan Carr criticized Kimmel's remarks and suggested regulators could take action against the broadcast licenses of ABC-owned stations.

Broadcasters Nexstar and Sinclair, which own and operate a total of more than 60 ABC affiliates, then said they would drop Kimmel's show. ABC parent Disney temporarily pulled the show off the air.

"It is a decision we made because we felt some of the comments were ill-timed and thus insensitive. We have spent the last days having thoughtful conversations with Jimmy, and after those conversations, we reached the decision to return the show on Tuesday," Disney said.

Sinclair said it planned to replace Kimmel's show across its ABC affiliate stations with news programming starting Tuesday. "Discussions with ABC are ongoing as we evaluate the show's potential return," the company said in a statement.

A representative for Nexstar didn't respond to requests for comment on
