

ISRAELI SETTLERS use a tractor to haul away part of a downed Iranian missile on the outskirts of Jericho.

Attacks threaten to widen war in Mideast

Despite Trump's latest efforts, Israel and Iran may be on a collision course over Lebanon.

By NABIH BULOS

BEIRUT — Israel and Iran suspended military attacks on each other Monday, heeding President Trump's call to end a flare-up that threatened to derail a brittle two-month ceasefire and engulf the Middle East in all-out conflict once again.

Iran's military said in a statement on Iranian state media that it had "delivered a painful response" to Israel's attacks on Lebanon.

"Accordingly, the operations of the armed forces are hereby halted," the statement said. But it added that "if the aggressions and evils continue, including in southern Lebanon, much more severe and crushing measures will be on the way."

Israel too said it would cease attacks on Iran, with Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu saying in a televised address that if Iran "makes the mistake and returns to attacking us, we will respond with force."

The tit-for-tat attacks, which involved at least 30 ballistic missiles launched on Israel and dozens of Israeli airstrikes on Iran, threatened to widen the scope of a conflict that has already killed and wounded thousands, displaced more than a million and rattled economies across the globe.

"Israel and Iran must immediately stop 'shooting,'" Trump wrote early Monday on his social media platform, Truth Social.

Later, he wrote, "Both sides, Israel and Iran, are looking to do an immediate CEASEFIRE!"

"Final negotiations on 'Peace' are proceeding, subject to ignorance or stupidity getting in its way. The Blockade will remain in place, and in full force and effect, until a 'Final Deal' is reached. Things should move quickly."

Yet it appears likely Iran and Israel will again be on a collision course over Lebanon. In his address, Netanyahu said the Israeli military will continue attacking in Lebanon.

"Over the past day, Iran and Hezbollah tried to impose a new equation on us. That equation is intolerable and completely unacceptable to me," he said.

Over the last two months of the ceasefire, Trump repeatedly said he was on the verge of signing a deal with Iran, despite repeated con-

[See Mideast, A3]

Trump's false claims of rigged votes stoke fears

Californians are worried feds will step in, poll finds

By Phil Willon, Justine McDaniel and Nicole Nixon

SACRAMENTO — Even before President Trump's latest wave of unfounded claims of election fraud in California, a significant share of voters in the state expressed concerns about federal interference in the electoral process, according to a new poll.

Trump on Monday claimed on his social media site that the race for Los Angeles mayor was a "Rigged Election," an allegation that came after Democrat Nithya Raman overtook Republican Spencer Pratt for second place in the ongoing primary election vote count.

Raman's lead had prompted Rep. Abe Hamadeh, an Arizona Republican, to call for the election to be federalized, or run by the federal government rather than the state, a message Trump reposted. Raman on Monday clinched a spot on the November ballot, the Associated Press declared.

Earlier Sunday, Trump had alleged during an interview with NBC News that California elections officials "were cheating." That came after a debunked social media conspiracy theory claiming that a lag in an update of electronic voting data by the Associated Press showed Pratt was being cheated. On Monday, House Speaker Mike Johnson said the elections process in the L.A. mayoral race "stinks to high heaven."

The ongoing attacks by Trump and his supporters continue to erode confidence in the nation's elections, especially among Republicans, threatening a pillar of American democracy, said political scientist Eric Schickler, co-director of the Institute of Governmental Studies at UC Berkeley.

"The president ... wants to use those claims to make changes in the election process," he said.

[See Poll, A14]

State law aims to add housing near transit

As of July 1, cities must allow taller residential complexes near stops

By Roger Vincent

KAYLA BARTKOWSKI Los Angeles Times

THE METRO E Line passes homes along Exposition Boulevard near the Expo/Crenshaw stop last week.

A new state law that allows denser housing development near major transit stops goes into effect in July, opening the door to construction of more than 1 million new units in California's urban centers.

The law forces cities to approve taller apartment and condominium complexes around rail stops, ferry terminals and rapid transit bus stops, overriding local restrictions that might have stopped development in the past.

The Abundant Homes Near Transit Act, also known as Senate Bill 79, is one of the most aggressive measures state legislators have taken to address California's housing shortage in recent years.

Real estate developers are already cautiously planning to take advantage of the eased regulations and plan to announce new projects after the law goes into effect.

The bill was introduced in 2025 by Sen. Scott Wiener (D-San Francisco), who emphasizes that the state needs to take immediate ac-

[See Housing, A10]

Raman moves on to face Bass in mayoral race

Council member's focus on Pratt's past pays off; she edges him out for No. 2 spot.

By Noah Goldberg and David Zahniser

Nithya Raman had 115 days to make her case to Los Angeles voters.

The City Council member made a surprise late entry into the mayor's race, the last of the major candidates to file for the primary. That left little time for her to form a campaign team, build her name recognition and persuade voters that she would be the best choice to lead the city.

On Monday, the Associated Press called the race, concluding that Raman would have enough votes to make a Nov. 3 runoff against Mayor Karen Bass, the first-place finisher who secured her spot in the showdown last week.

Reality television personality Spencer Pratt, who was in second place on election night, saw his lead over Raman steadily erode as mail-in ballots postmarked as late as June 2 were counted.

On Monday, Raman widened her gap over Pratt to nearly 3 percentage points. Bass had 34.3% of the vote, compared with 28.6% for Raman and 25.8% for Pratt, the latest results showed.

Raman, in a statement, said she was "incredibly

KAYLA BARTKOWSKI L.A. Times

GINA FERAZZI Los Angeles Times

AS OF MONDAY, Bass, top, had 34.3% of the vote and Raman 28.6%.

honored" by the results, and invited Angelenos who are "frustrated by the broken status quo" to join her campaign.

"For too long, City Hall has prioritized giving political advantage to powerful interests that fund elections. Meanwhile, working people pay the price in higher rents, depleted services, and a city that has stopped working for

[See Mayor, A6]

Council, panel vie to oversee LAPD

Proposed changes raise the question: Who can make police more accountable?

By Libor Jany

Jeff Skobin was tired of asking.

Last November, amid a startling increase in LAPD shootings, the Los Angeles police commissioner requested a report from the department about how its officers' use of deadly force compared with that of other large agencies. At the time, Chief Jim McDonnell promised a careful review.

The next month, Skobin reminded the department that he was waiting on an update and was told it was still being compiled. He asked again in February and got the same answer. When April rolled around, and the LAPD still hadn't released the shooting review, Skobin demanded to know what the holdup was, the exasperation clear in his voice. Now, the report is slated to be released Tuesday.

The Los Angeles Police Department's unwillingness to provide its civilian bosses with answers to seemingly simple questions comes as the Police Commission seeks to strengthen its oversight role amid a bid by elected city leaders to expand their own power over the nation's third-largest police department.

Under proposed changes to the city charter — essentially L.A.'s constitution — the City Council would have the ability to override certain decisions made by the commission, the LAPD's historical policymaking body, and would have the final say on officer disciplinary decisions. The proposals are being reviewed by the council, among other changes to city government, and could go before voters in the Nov. 3 general election.

Proponents contend that the change would make the department more accountable to the public.

"I think that kind of over-

[See LAPD, A14]

Video shows utility line started fire, lawyers say

By Melody Petersen

New surveillance footage and other evidence from Southern California Edison confirm that a century-old, idle transmission line that the utility failed to remove ignited last year's deadly Eaton wildfire, lawyers for insurers said in a court filing.

Video obtained from a surveillance camera at Gerish Swim & Tennis Club in Pasadena shows two bright flashes occurring in the location of the tower holding the idle line at 6:11 p.m. on Jan. 7, 2025.

The flashes correspond to the time that Edison recorded two faults, three seconds apart, on another transmission line more than five miles away, the lawyers said in the filing, citing new data provided by the utility.

Soon after the faults, residents nearby recorded videos of a fire burning at the base of the tower, which is known as M16T1.

"Southern California Edison has spent the last sixteen months attempting to forestall the inevitable legal consequences of razing a large swath of the communities of Altadena and Pasadena to the ground," the lawyers wrote in the filing.

"The Eaton Fire could not have occurred if SCE had simply disassembled and removed Structure M16T1," the lawyers added.

[See Edison, A11]

A Senate race to keep an eye on

Tuesday's primary in Maine could offer a clue about Democrats' chances of assuming control. NATION, A4

Ocean takes toll on Pacifica pier

The structure is closed after city workers find cracks and concrete chunks falling off. CALIFORNIA, B1

Weather
Clouds, then sun.
L.A. Basin: 79/63. B6

RONALDO BOLAÑOS Los Angeles Times

U.S. HAS FANS' ATTENTION

Days ahead of World Cup opener, 5,500 people crowded Orange County Great Park on Monday to watch the national team practice. SPORTS, B10