Thousands line up in St. Peter's Square in Vatican City on Friday to view the body of Pope Francis. His funeral will be Saturday.

Pope, president had complicated ties

BY MARTINE POWERS

In 2017, Pope Francis met President Donald Trump for the first and only time, and defused months of tension with the mention of a Slovenian pastry.

During that meeting, which included some of Trump's family, the pope shook the hand of first lady Melania Trump. Then he smiled and gestured over to her husband.

"What do you give him to eat?" Francis said, through an interpreter. "Potica?"

"Potica?" Melania Trump repeated back. Then, appearing to realize the pope was referring to the traditional baked roll from her homeland, she broke into a grin. Her husband laughed, too. "Yes!"

The moment captured Trump's complicated relationship with Francis, who died Monday. Over the course of the past decade, Pope Francis and President Trump came to be ideological adversaries, symbols of polar opposite worldviews. But at times, Trump was charmed by Francis — and by the authenticity and immense popularity his papacy represented.

The complexity of that relationship will be on display Saturday, when Trump and the first lady plan to be in Rome to attend Pope Francis's funeral at the Vatican.

"We look forward to being there!" Trump posted Monday afternoon on Truth Social.

Trump will be the second sitting U.S. president to attend the funeral of a pope, after President George W. Bush traveled to the Vatican in 2005 to attend the funeral of Pope John Paul II.

The pope's brand of progressive Catholicism and Trump's populist political movement ran on parallel tracks.

Before becoming president and pope, Trump and Francis were both relative outsiders who came to prominence with a promise to shake up the status quo. They shared a natural ability to excite a crowd, to speak in direct and plain ways that built loyalty and adulation among their followers.

Francis, however, avoided

DOJ charges judge with obstructing immigrant arrest

ACCUSED OF 'MISDIRECTING' ICE AGENTS

Wisconsin case escalates offensive against judiciary

BY PATRICK MARLEY AND JEREMY ROEBUCK

MILWAUKEE — The Justice Department has charged a Wisconsin judge with obstructing an immigration arrest operation — a significant escalation of Trump administration threats to target local officials accused of interfering with immigration enforcement.

FBI Director Kash Patel announced the arrest of Milwaukee County Circuit Judge Hannah Dugan on the social media platform X, accusing her of "intentionally misdirecting" federal agents as they sought to detain an immigrant who was set to appear for an unrelated proceeding last week.

In court filings Friday, the government said the judge sent the federal agents away from that hearing, then escorted the man and his lawyer out of her courtroom through a private exit.

"Thankfully, our agents chased down the perp on foot and he's

Giant tent rises to house detained immigrants

Semipermanent space built in Fla. to relieve crowded ICE facilities

BY DOUGLAS MACMILLAN

An Immigration and Customs Enforcement facility in Miami plans to move up to 400 immigrant detainees into a large tent that was erected in recent weeks to accommodate a surging population of migrants, said Rep. Frederica S. Wilson (D-Florida), who toured the facility Thursday. The soft-sided structure at Miami's Krome North Service Processing Center contains cots, televisions, ventilation pipes and tile flooring, Wilson and her communications director said in interviews with The Washington Post. An ICE representative told her that the facility could house 200 people on an upstairs level and 200 people on a downstairs level, and that the agency planned to begin moving people into the structure on Friday, she said.

A spokesman for ICE did not immediately respond to questions from The Post, including how long people may be held in the tent and whether the facility

Europe locks arms with Kyiv but urges it to bend

Steadfast support gives Zelensky some space in face of U.S. demands

BY STEVE HENDRIX AND SIOBHÁN O'GRADY

LONDON — European leaders are straining to maintain a delicate diplomatic balance as attempts to reach a peace deal in Ukraine near a critical juncture, expressing full-throated backing for Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky even as they try to edge him closer to accepting some of the controversial terms being pushed by President Donald Trump.

French President Emmanuel Macron and British Prime Minister Keir Starmer, in particular, have backed Zelensky's demands for an unconditional ceasefire, which Macron said this week the Kremlin "must accept." To date, Russian President Vladimir Putin, who on Friday met for roughly three hours with Trump's special envoy Steve Witkoff, has rejected a full truce.

Europe also is supporting Zelensky's insistence that a deal must include significant security guarantees for Ukraine. This steadfast support for Ukraine has given Kyiv, which is reluctant to set off a new round of tensions with Washington, some much-needed space to push back on the White House. The support comes even as Europe acknowledges privately that it will not be able to fully make up for U.S. support if the White House pulls the plug on Ukraine.

Europe this week proposed a new set of terms to counter a U.S. proposal given to Ukraine last week, which had been described as the final U.S. offer for a deal. Those terms were widely viewed by Ukrainians and Europeans as heavily favoring Russia. The deal would have involved U.S. recognition of Russia's illegal annexation of Crimea and the handover to Moscow the areas it controls in exchange for stopping further attacks, as well as the immediately lifting of sanctions on Russia.

European leaders, who were set to host high-level talks in London on Wednesday, before two of three top U.S. officials dropped out, added many different elements to the deal, including a full ceasefire to start and "robust security guarantees" specifically from the United States. Europe also wants frozen Russian assets to fund reconstruction in Ukraine and only the "gradual" lifting of sanctions on Moscow if the peace deal is honored.

The details of both offers were first reported by Reuters on Friday. The Washington Post confirmed their accuracy with two officials briefed on negotiations.

An NFL player became 'a monster,' and his daughter looks for answers

BY KENT BABB

ANN ARBOR, MICH. — By the time her dad visited last year, Jaedan Brown had gotten used to the blank spaces in her family story. There were hazy memories, strangers' recollections, photos of a vibrant man she had only heard about.

"Wanna watch the NFL game tonight," she had recently texted him. No response. Just a ghost, on

"Hi daddy," she wrote the next day.

"???" she texted after that.

Jaedan's older brother and sister had quit trying. He's gone, they would say. Melissa, their mother, implored Jaedan to move on, too, and stop asking painful questions. "You don't need to know," Melissa said.
