

The Washington Post

Prices may vary in areas outside metropolitan Washington.

SU V1 V2 V3 V4

Partly sunny, windy 85/65 • Tomorrow: T-storms 78/54 B20

Democracy Dies in Darkness

TUESDAY, MAY 5, 2026 • $4

PHOTOS BY KIM RAFF/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Tom Zuiderveld puts up campaign signs for his wife, Idaho State Sen. Glenneda Zuiderveld, last month in Gooding County, Idaho.

Idaho immigration fight reflects GOP schism

Lawmaker's support for crackdown in state with high reliance on foreign-born labor hurts husband

BY KARIN BRULLIARD

TWIN FALLS, IDAHO — The call came as Tom Zuiderveld was driving last month, just minutes from his home on five verdant acres of Southern Idaho's agricultural heartland. It was his district manager, relaying that three of the dairies he sold synthetic oil to had refused to continue working with him.

Zuiderveld felt blindsided — he had known the dairy owners for years, and the accounts represented 80 percent of his income. But it wasn't about his performance, the manager explained on the phone and in a later email. It was about the politics of Zuiderveld's wife.

Glenneda's stance caused several owners of the dairy farms that drive the area's economy to sever business ties with Tom.

Glenneda Zuiderveld is a Republican state senator and member of a far-right bloc that was pushing for strict immigration laws. Idaho's dairy industry, which powers the economy of the Magic Valley region anchored by Twin Falls, depends on foreign-born labor and fiercely opposed the measures.

To the Zuidervelds, the rupture was simple retaliation that illustrates just how bitterly personal American politics has become — an “ambush,” Tom Zuiderveld said, that cost the couple as much as $125,000 in commission a year. To the businesses, which are dominated by Republicans in this deep red state, the moves

SEE IDAHO ON A6

ICE's use of force in facilities accelerates

Internal records reveal sharp rise in incidents during Trump's first year

BY DOUGLAS MACMILLAN, ANDREW BA TRAN, DREA CORNEJO AND LUIS MELGAR

Pedro Cantú Ríos was eating lunch when he felt the chemicals rush into his lungs.

Like many of the immigrant men held in a cramped Alaska jail last summer, Cantú Ríos, then 68, had grown frustrated and restless, locked in a small cell with no windows and no access to his personal belongings, he recalled in an interview conducted in Spanish.

As he ate in the communal room, he overheard some detainees complaining to a guard about needing their things. Minutes later, according to documents and interviews, a throng of guards arrived wielding gun-like weapons. They fired plastic spheres the size of gumballs into the room, which burst into orange clouds of

SEE ICE ON A14

How Republicans warmed to psychedelics

BY RACHEL ROUBEIN

After taping Joe Rogan's podcast in late March, former Texas governor Rick Perry (R) and ibogaine advocate W. Bryan Hubbard made an unusual request: “Mr. Rogan, would you be willing to consider asking the president of the United States for a meeting?” Hubbard recalled asking.

They were focused on the illegal psychedelic ibogaine, the extract of an ancient African shrub, which some believe can help treat addiction and post-traumatic stress disorder.

Less than three weeks later, Hubbard, the CEO of Americans for Ibogaine, was standing behind President Donald Trump in the Oval Office. The president hailed the drug and announced efforts aimed at accelerating research into it while fast-tracking federal reviews of other psyc-delic medicines for mental health conditions.

The short time between Rogan's appeal to the president and Trump's executive order last month has buoyed the hopes of those advocating for broader access to the drugs, particularly for military veterans suffering from PTSD and brain trauma. For decades the Republican Party has supported the Nixon-era “war on

SEE PSYCHEDELICS ON A2

TOM BRENNER/THE WASHINGTON POST

Post reporter Hannah Natanson after the public service prize was announced in the D.C. newsroom.

Strikes in Hormuz, Gulf region imperil U.S.-Iran ceasefire

AMERICAN DESTROYER IS FIRED ON, NOT HIT

Iranian fast boats chasing commercial ships destroyed

BY SUSANNAH GEORGE AND TARA COPP

A sharp escalation in attacks in the Strait of Hormuz and the Persian Gulf on Monday is threatening the shaky ceasefire between Iran and the United States as the two sides struggle to make progress in talks on a lasting end to the war.

Two U.S. destroyers, closely followed by two merchant vessels, came under attack during successful transits of the strait Monday morning, in an expansion of U.S. operations in the waterway. The United Arab Emirates reported an Iranian assault on an energy hub that caused a fire. And Oman's state media reported an attack in the country but did not identify a perpetrator.

Iran fired cruise missiles and drones at the U.S. naval and commercial vessels but did not land any hits, said Adm. Brad Cooper, head of U.S. Central Command. Iran also sent six fast boats after the commercial ships, he said, but U.S. forces fired on and destroyed the vessels. He would not say whether the exchange of strikes meant the ceasefire was over.

In a separate incident, President Donald Trump said Iran hit a South Korean tanker in the strait. “Perhaps it's time for South Korea to come and join the mission!” Trump wrote in a Truth Social post Monday.

Any U.S. vessels in the strait would be considered “a legitimate target,” the head of the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps, the predominant branch of the Iranian armed forces, warned earlier Monday.

“The Strait of Hormuz will not be opened by the tweet of the President of the United States; the management and control of this waterway is in the hands of Iran,” Ahmad Vahidi said in a post on X.

Iranian officials said over the weekend that U.S. attempts to “interfere” with Tehran's “management” of the strait would

SEE IRAN ON A13

Multiple police leaders in D.C. face termination

Some of proposed firings tied to probe of alleged crime data manipulation

BY JENNY GATHRIGHT AND EMILY DAVIES

Multiple high-ranking D.C. police officials face termination or other potential disciplinary action, three officials say, creating a scramble as the department faces intense scrutiny from federal officials.

At least some of the proposed discipline is related to an internal affairs investigation into the alleged manipulation of crime data, according to the officials, who spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss a sensitive internal process. The city has been investigating the matter, along with the Department of Justice and Republicans in Congress.

The officials accused of misconduct will have the opportunity to defend themselves against the allegations through the department's disciplinary process, which can lead to arbitration and take years to complete in some cases.

The recommended terminations and other disciplinary actions, if enacted, portend a potentially sweeping shake-up among top department leadership. It will also cause an immediate staffing challenge as some officials are placed on administrative leave.

Attorney Pamela Keith, who represents one of the captains facing termination, said her client declined to comment on the allegations. But Keith said she thinks the investigation is sweeping up managers who did not intentionally try to downplay crime. Some are being accused of improperly changing crime re-

SEE POLICE ON A4

Post wins public service, photography Pulitzers

Top prize was for stories on how federal overhaul upended workers' lives

BY SCOTT NOVER

The Washington Post on Monday won the Pulitzer Prize for public service for its coverage of President Donald Trump's far-reaching efforts in his second term to shrink the federal workforce and overhaul government through the Elon Musk-led U.S. DOGE Service.

The Post also won the Pulitzer Prize for feature photography for work by former staff photographer Jahi Chikwendiu documenting the struggle of a young couple coping with a terminal cancer diagnosis even as they awaited the birth of their daughter.

The stories that won the public service prize, widely considered the top honor in American journalism, prominently featured staff writer Hannah Natanson's reporting that chronicled how federal workers' lives were upended last year. In an essay, she recalled being the newspaper's “federal government whisperer,” a role she described as all-consuming, involving interactions with more than 1,000 sensitive government sources.

SEE PULITZERS ON A8

Courts: Second judge blocks search of Post reporter's data. A8

IN THE NEWS

Mifepristone ruling A Supreme Court order temporarily allows patients access to a widely used abortion pill through the mail. A3

Golf course battle A federal judge warned the Trump administration not to move forward with major changes at East Potomac Golf Links without first giving notice. B12

THE NATION School cellphone bans don't affect test scores or attendance, according to a new study. A3
White House lawyers are readying staffers for dealing with a Democratic Congress. A3

THE WORLD Poisonous black rain is falling in parts of Russia as Ukrainian drones strike oil facilities. A12
A hantavirus outbreak is suspected aboard a cruise ship where three people have died. A13

THE ECONOMY A federal lawsuit has been filed on behalf of property owners seeking compensation for pandemic losses. A16
The U.S. stock market fell Monday while oil prices moved higher following an escalation of tensions in the Middle East. A16

STYLE George Conway, arguably the country's preeminent critic of the president, is running for Congress in N.Y. B1

SPORTS Wrexham's failure to reach English soccer's top flight this year might be a blessing. B7

THE REGION A police officer and actors try to connect to teens at a school in D.C. troubled by gun violence. B12
A Florida man has stood atop the Douglass Bridge in Washington for days to protest the Iran war. B12

BUSINESS NEWS.....A16
COMICS.....B4
OBITUARIES.....B14
OPINION PAGES.....A17
TELEVISION.....B6
WORLD NEWS.....A12

CONTENT © 2026
The Washington Post
Year 149, No. 54572

