

MARLI MILLER UCG/Universal Images Group/Getty Images
AN OFFSHORE oil platform in the Santa Barbara Channel. A Houston-based company is suing the California Coastal Commission, which accuses it of violating the Coastal Act with pipeline work in the area.

Texas firm pushes to restart Santa Barbara oil drilling

More than 50 years ago, a catastrophic oil spill along Santa Barbara's coastline served to galvanize the modern environmental movement and also helped usher in one of the state's strongest conservation laws: the California Coastal Act.

Now, as the Trump administration seeks to encourage oil and gas production within federal lands and waters, that watershed conservation law is being tested along the same stretch of coastline — and in a way it never has been before.

For months, a Texas-based oil company has rebuffed the au-

Company has been repairing and upgrading pipes, ignoring Coastal Commission's demands to stop

By Grace Toohey

thority of the California Coastal Commission — the body tasked with enforcing the act — and has instead pushed forward with controversial plans to revive oil production off the Gaviota Coast.

Ten years after another spill brought oil production here to a halt, Sable Offshore Corp. has begun repairing and upgrading the network of oil pipelines responsible for that 2015 spill, without Coastal Commission approval and ignoring the commission's repeated demands to stop its work, officials say.

[See Oil, A16]

'Nowhere to hide': Big Tech feels squeeze of Trump's tariffs

Locked into global supply chains, Apple and others face higher costs — which could in turn hit consumers.

By QUEENIE WONG AND WENDY LEE

SAN FRANCISCO — The iPhone is a quintessentially 21st century product — Californian in its creation and design and now enmeshed in the global economy.

Apple makes most of its iPhones in China, though in recent years the Cupertino-based company has made more of its products in India, Vietnam and other nations. In all, the tech giant says it relies on more than 50 countries and regions to put AirPods, iPads and MacBooks in the hands of consumers.

Now, that global supply chain is under siege.

Last week, President Trump said he would impose a baseline 10% tariff on imports from all countries on Saturday. His administration also added tariffs of 34% on China, 46% on Vietnam and 26% on India.

"Apple has nowhere to hide," said Eric Harwit, professor of Asian studies at the University of Hawaii at Manoa. "No matter where they're making their technology, they're going to be suffering, they're going to see higher costs."

Trump's sweeping tariffs have rattled both investors and some of the world's most valuable tech companies that have fueled the global economy and Silicon Valley's growth. They've also raised questions about whether these global businesses will pass the higher costs on to consumers or slash their payrolls.

Apple has been especially hard hit. Its stock plunged more than 9% on Thursday and dropped another 7% on Friday to close at $188.38.

Share prices of other tech titans, including Google parent company Alphabet, Meta, chipmaker Nvidia and Amazon, also saw big declines, causing the tech-

[See Tariffs, A10]

Syrian villages left frozen in fear

Sectarian massacres send men into hiding, cast doubt on government

By NABIH BULOS

AL-SANOBAR, Syria — Mayada pointed to a divot picked out of the pavement in front of her parents' house — the hole left by the bullet when gunmen threw her 85-year-old father on the ground and shot him execution-style in the head.

"His skull was completely split ... all in pieces," she said, her face impassive. Inside the house she found her mother and sister, also shot dead in a hail of bullets fired through the windows.

"There was blood everywhere."

Weeks later, the blood has been washed away, but the aftereffects of the bloodletting linger here in the coastal village of Al-Sanobar and throughout northwest-ern Syria.

The early March massacres that killed members of Mayada's family (she gave only her first name to avoid reprisals) left hundreds — maybe thousands — of civilians dead. It was the worst outbreak of violence since an Islamist rebel coalition ousted former President Bashar Assad in December and seized control of the country.

The killings, which began with clashes between Assad loyalists and pro-government forces, turned into an all-out sectarian pogrom targeting Alawites, mem-

[See Syria, A5]

CHARLES SYKES Invision/Associated Press
KANYE WEST with Kim Kardashian in 2019. He founded a school in the Valley in honor of his mother.

How Kanye West's school unraveled

Suits, interviews offer view of dysfunction at Donda Academy. 'It was just a free-for-all.'

By STACY PERMAN

It began, as many things do, with noble intentions.

In the fall of 2020, Kanye West, music impresario, fashion designer, flame thrower and Kim Kardashian's ex-husband, founded a private school.

The enterprise was conceived in homage to his mother, Donda West, a respected educator (she had chaired the English department at Chicago State University) and arguably the most seminal influence and corrective force in her son's life until she died of coronary disease and complications following cosmetic surgery in 2007.

Although shrouded in mystery, Yeezy Christian Academy opened with great promise on a sprawling

[See School, A8]

Will L.A.'s Black social spaces survive?

Small businesses see support ebb since Black Lives Matter movement's peak.

By KARLA MARIE SANFORD

Tucked away on a quiet part of La Cienega Avenue in the Culver City Arts District, Black Image Center feels reminiscent of a collegiate Black student center. On a recent Tuesday, five people were gathered for the center's daily community co-working series.

Laughter and casual conversation swam above the sound of the clicks of their laptops. But instead of a 100-page reading or a mind-boggling problem set, they were working on creative pursuits — editing a photography-

[See Spaces, A11]

JAY L. CLENDENIN Los Angeles Times
MAURICE HARRIS in 2020 at his Bloom & Plume Coffee shop, which closed last year. Hit hard by the pandemic, he said, "what kept us open was George Floyd."

Video casts doubt in medic killings
Images on phone belonging to one of 15 slain workers in Gaza contradict Israel's account. WORLD, A3

Foreign student visas canceled
Trump administration revokes documents at UC schools and Stanford. CALIFORNIA, B1

Weather
Sunny.
L.A. Basin: 81/53. B10

For the latest news, go to latimes.com.

Protests take aim at Trump, Musk
Demonstrations in L.A. and cities nationwide target administration's policies. CALIFORNIA, B1

Printed with soy inks on partially recycled paper.

7 85944 10300 9