

Pentagon readies soldiers for Minn.

1,500 may deploy after Trump’s Insurrection Act threat, officials say

BY DAN LAMOTHE AND PRAVEENA SOMASUNDARAM

The Pentagon has ordered about 1,500 active-duty soldiers to prepare for a possible deployment to Minnesota, defense officials told The Washington Post late Saturday, after President Donald Trump threatened to invoke the Insurrection Act in response to unrest there.

The soldiers are assigned to two infantry battalions with the Army’s 11th Airborne Division, which is based in Alaska and specializes in cold-weather operations.

The Army placed the units on prepare-to-deploy orders in case violence in Minnesota escalates, officials said, characterizing the move as “prudent planning.” It is not clear whether any of them will be sent to the state, the officials said, speaking like some others on the condition of anonymity to discuss sensitive military planning.

The White House said in a statement that it’s typical for the Pentagon “to be prepared for any decision the President may or may not make.” Sean Parnell, a spokesman for Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth, said in a statement Sunday that the Pentagon is “always prepared to execute the orders of the Commander-in-Chief if called

SEE MINNESOTA ON A5

Polling: A majority of voters express disapproval of ICE’s work. A4

FBI: Bureau had opened civil rights probe in shooting’s aftermath. A4

A yearning Gen Z revives the fashions of millennials

BY JACLYN PEISER

Step inside a Hollister store today, and get a millennial retrospective: low-rise baggy and flare jeans, baby doll tops, fur-trimmed cable-knit V-necks, and sweatpants with numbers and words like “Senior” printed on the backside.

Walk outside, and you may notice teens sporting Longchamp totes and Ugg slippers. Or digital cameras, which are seeing a resurgence after years of being sidelined by smartphones.

These are the markers of “Millennial Core” — or the “Y2K aesthetic,” depending on whom you ask — a Gen Z reimagining of the trends its elders (now roughly 29 to 45 years old) made mainstream in the late 1990s and early aughts. Though it’s not unusual for teens and young adults to resurrect styles of the past — fashion trends tend to have 20-year cycles — the current moment speaks to a yearning for what they perceive as simpler times, when people their age weren’t tied to their phones, endlessly scrolling and battling brain rot, industry experts say.

“It is such a foreign concept to

SEE FASHION ON A15

A monumental birthday

MAXINE WALLACE/THE WASHINGTON POST

People braved snow and frigid temperatures to take photos in front of the Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial on the National Mall on Sunday. The birthday of the civil rights leader and Nobel Peace laureate, who was assassinated in 1968 at the age of 39, will be observed on Monday.

Civil rights leaders look to lessons of the 1960s

BY EMMANUEL FELTON

In the nearly six decades since the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr., the civil rights movement has reinvented itself time and again, moving from a fight to eliminate Jim Crow to more contested political and economic terrain, from affirmative action to affirmative actions.

Leaders across the movement say that one year into the Trump administration, they face a new inflection point.

On his first day in office,

JOE RAEDLE/GETTY IMAGES

Bernice King thinks about lessons on perseverance.

LEIGH VOGEL/GETTY IMAGES

Ash-lee Henderson evoked activists’ unified front.

President Donald Trump signed an executive order calling for the dismantling of diversity, equity and inclusion programs throughout the federal government. Top administration officials have urged White men to file complaints with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, casting programs benefiting women and people of color as discriminatory. The Supreme Court is expected to rule on a case this year that could eliminate a key provision of the 1965

SEE CIVIL RIGHTS ON A6

Wolves in political crosshairs as Trump targets Colorado

Reintroduction program on hold as leaders say state is being punished for jailing election denier

BY KARIN BRULLIARD AND EMILY DAVIES
IN BOULDER, COLO.

Colorado was preparing to fly in as many as 15 gray wolves from Canada when a letter from the Trump administration arrived in the fall, sternly ordering the state to “cease and desist.”

In December, the federal government upped the stakes, threatening to seize control of Colorado’s effort to reintroduce the predators to a state where their howls had nearly been silenced.

The intervention from Washington, which alleges Colorado violated an agreement with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, has abruptly thrown a voter-approved wolf revival into disarray, essentially blocking the state’s ability to bolster a nascent population and raising doubts about the contentious program’s viability.

While welcomed by many ranchers and other critics, the takeover warning baffled former senior agency officials and environmental groups. They called it a misinterpretation of the agreement, as well as an impractical idea from a federal agency that has

SEE WOLVES ON A18

COLORADO PARKS AND WILDLIFE/AP

State wildlife officials watch a gray wolf bound away after it was released on public land in Grand County, Colorado, in December 2023 as part of the state’s voter-backed reintroduction program.

Europe weighs tariff options

TRUMP THREAT SPARKS A SUMMIT

E.U. leaders united on Greenland sovereignty

BY ELLEN FRANCIS, KATE BRADY, LEO SANDS AND TOBI RAJI

BRUSSELS — European ambassadors met in Brussels on Sunday to weigh whether to retaliate against Washington after President Donald Trump threatened to impose tariffs on eight countries unless they acquiesce to his bid to acquire Greenland.

The scope of Europe’s response will be a key test for its diplomats as they balance the need to stand up for European sovereignty, manage delicate relationships with Washington, and consider political and economic pressures at home.

Members of the European Union are considering imposing tariffs or measures targeting U.S. firms if diplomatic efforts fail to find an off-ramp with Trump, two European diplomats speaking on the condition of anonymity to discuss a sensitive matter told The Washington Post.

The 27-nation bloc’s ambassadors debated the prospect of retaliation during a closed-door meeting in Brussels on Sunday afternoon, but there was a broad

SEE GREENLAND ON A12

‘Board of Peace’: Trump plans to charge $1B for permanent spot. A9

Heating up: Arctic ice melt may fuel interest in Greenland. A12

Dozens of Venezuelan prisoners have vanished

BY ANA VANESSA HERRERO

CARACAS, VENEZUELA — Before sunrise, Jesús Ramos dropped to one knee, put a ring of yarn around Victoria’s finger and asked her to marry him.

“It was an easy yes,” she said this month.

The couple shared a long embrace. Then Ramos, a former officer with the Venezuelan National Guard, said goodbye and surrendered to the government of President Nicolás Maduro. It was 2020, he had joined a failed attempt to oust the authoritarian leader, and he had been hiding from security forces for more than a month.

He was sent to El Helicoide, the infamous prison in Caracas run by the regime’s principal intelligence agency. The couple married, and for years after, she visited him there one day each week.

Then, in July, he was transferred without notice to an undisclosed facility. Victoria hasn’t heard from him since.

During a dozen years under Maduro, Venezuela’s socialist state detained thousands of political prisoners. When U.S.

SEE VENEZUELA ON A10

BUSINESS NEWS.....	A14
CLASSIFIEDS.....	C12
COMICS.....	B4

HEALTH & SCIENCE.....	D1
METRO.....	C8
OBITUARIES.....	C10

OPINION PAGES.....	A16
SPORTS.....	C1
STYLE.....	B1

TELEVISION.....	B6
WEATHER.....	C18
WORLD.....	A8

CONTENT © 2026
The Washington Post / Year 149, No. 54466

There’s information.
And then there’s Intelligence.

Discover the difference with WP Intelligence
Visit wapo.st/wpi to learn more

wp Intelligence

Powerful insights. Exclusive access.