

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 2025

BLOOD ON THE STREETS

The battles among Cape Verdean gangs showed no signs of slowing

CRAIG F. WALKER/GLOBE STAFF

Another death, another vicious cycle of violence

Second in a series

By Bob Hohler

GLOBE STAFF

JOHN TLUMACKI/GLOBE STAFF FILE 2006

Christina DoSouto (top) stood in the living room of the Dorchester home in which she grew up. She said her mother, Luisa Fernandes, would look out that window at the spot where her son, Luis, was fatally shot in 2006. His pallbearers (above) wore the white of a chef, Luis DoSouto's profession.

A priest prayed over the casket of Luis DoSouto, the murdered chef. The pallbearers wore white. Rain had fallen, and gray morning light filtered through the church's stained glass windows.

In the pews, mourners wept. Milton DoSouto was inconsolable, rocking back and forth, chanting the name of his older brother, "Luis! Luis!"

It was May 2006, five days after Luis was shot outside the DoSouto home in Dorchester. His death was the latest amid the Cape Verdean gang war that had torn apart the community and along with it the DoSouto family. Milton, whose Cape Verdean Outlaws gang was drawn into the war and had become its own engine of violence, had been shot up so badly he could not walk without a cane. Gunfights had erupted outside the family's door. And now Luis.

None of it made sense, and there was no apparent way to stop it. The city had failed to focus effectively enough on the lethal potential of a dense cluster of warring youth gangs until it was too late.

It was a lesson for the future; there was no time

DOSOUTO, Page A8

European leaders, fearing they have lost their role in helping bring about peace in Ukraine, set up an emergency meeting to counter the Putin-Trump arrangement for talks. A6.

Boston's police commissioner defended the department's efforts to diversify the force. B1.

Developers and investors are considering suburban office parks for housing amid the ongoing disruption in commercial real estate. D1.

Mt. Whoosh more

Monday: Very windy. High 28-33, low 14-19.
Tuesday: Sunny and brisk. High 23-28, low 10-15.
Sunrise: 6:38. Sunset: 5:19
Weather and comics, D4-5.
Obituaries, C11.

VOL. 307, NO. 48

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

0 947725 4

AP cuts leave region with fewer reporters

Once omnipresent news collective has shifted overall coverage

By Aidan Ryan

GLOBE STAFF

Journalist Bill Kole spent nearly 32 years at the Associated Press, with stints in Detroit, Hartford, Lansing, New York, Paris, Amsterdam, and Vienna, reflecting the vast reach of the revered journalism organization.

In 2009, Kole returned home to Massachusetts to serve as the New England bureau chief and later news editor for the region. He oversaw a 'News costs money to produce.'

KAREN TESTA,
the former editor for the Associated Press's East region

staff of roughly two dozen reporters who spent their days covering New England state houses, following high-profile court cases, and chronicling the wacky stories that distinguish the region, such as horse-drawn trash service in Vermont.

"New England is the king of quirk," he said. "It's a sandbox for an enterprising journalist to have fun in."

But once ubiquitous, the AP's staff of traditional reporters in New England is much smaller, a consequence of the financial pressures that have

ASSOCIATED PRESS, Page A12

A Boston tease party: State's plans for US 250th called scattered, late

By Brian MacQuarrie

GLOBE STAFF

Massachusetts proudly calls itself the birthplace of the American Revolution, but critics say the state's plans for its 250th anniversary might be too little, too late for a celebration that begins in only two months at the Lexington and Concord battlefields.

Less than $2 million in local grants for the 250th has been awarded so far in Massachusetts for this once-in-a-generation commemoration, and a mix of historians, lawmakers, and nonprofit officials are concerned that Massachusetts has fallen behind compared with other key Revolutionary states in its grass-roots programming.

Time is running short, the critics say. Nearly all of the remaining major 250th anniversaries in Massachusetts will occur over the next 13 months, coinciding with the evacuation of British troops from Boston in March 1776. Afterward, the fighting moved elsewhere.

"We've prepared poorly. It's never really been seen as a Massachusetts priority," said state Senator Michael Barrett, a Democrat whose district includes Concord and parts of Lexington. "Ran-

REVOLUTION ANNIVERSARY, Page A12

Trump takes first case to high court

Seeks ruling on his firing of independent counsel leading watchdog office

By Adam Liptak

NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — In the first case to reach the Supreme Court arising from the blitz of actions taken in the early weeks of the new administration, lawyers for President Trump asked the justices Sunday to let him fire a government lawyer who leads a watchdog agency.

The administration's emergency application asked the court to vacate a federal trial judge's order temporarily reinstating Hampton Dellinger, head of the Office of Special Counsel. Dellinger leads an independent agency charged with safeguarding government whistle-blowers and enforcing certain ethics laws. The position is unrelated to special counsels appointed by the Justice Department.

"This court should not allow lower courts to seize executive power by dictating to the president how long he must continue employing an agency head against his will," the administration's filing said.

The court is expected to act in the coming days.

The filing amounts to a challenge to a foundational precedent that said Congress can limit

TRUMP, Page A7

Classes and cash

An effort targeting federal funding for public K-12 schools could have broad-reaching implications for education across New England. B1.

Privacy concerns raised

Elon Musk's DOGE is seeking access to personal taxpayer data at the IRS. D2.

A perilous pause

The freeze on foreign aid threatens antiterror programs across the globe. A4.

State's artists say they feel frozen out

NEA pulls grant money from local organizations

By Julian E.J. Sorapuru

GLOBE STAFF

A few months ago, Northampton-based children's book author and illustrator Grace Lin signed contracts to adapt two of her books, "Chinese Menu" and "A Big Bed for Little Snow," into plays at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts. It was "a dream come true," she said.

Then came Wednesday's news that President Trump had been unanimously elected as the new chairman of the Kennedy Center after remaking the voting board to include more of his political allies and pledging to end "woke" programming at the center. A wave of resignations and cancellations followed.

Now, Lin's dream is in limbo. "I just don't foresee a book with an Asian American main character being something [the Kennedy Center] would be enthusiastic about," Lin, an advocate, said.

GRANTS, Page A7

JOANNE RATHE/GLOBE STAFF/FILE

The British "Regulars" fired their muskets during the reenactment of the "Battle of Lexington" in 2023.