Trump ramps up federal control in D.C.

Surge already visible on city streets

Even before President Donald Trump announced Monday that he would take over D.C. policing, city residents started to feel it.

Social media posts showed FBI officers on the streets over the weekend in areas known for nightlife, including the U Street corridor and the Navy Yard neighborhood, where a curfew preventing teens from gathering in big groups has been in place.

Residents shared images of officers wearing Immigration and Customs Enforcement uniforms under the Key Bridge in Georgetown on Sunday. The next morning, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives posted an image of officers standing next to FBI agents and Park Police officers, alongside pictures of confiscated firearms and narcotics.

Trump promised much more to come. He said his initiative would inject “an overwhelming presence” into D.C., with seven federal agencies expanding their reach into city life. The Drug Enforcement Administration began sending agents to homeless campsites. The U.S. Park Police was tasked with addressing graffiti in federal parks. National Guard troops were expected to staff intersections and work in shifts of 200 starting later this week. Trump said that more than 500 federal agents were deployed last week and that the effort will eventually be supplemented by an additional 800 troops from the D.C. National Guard.

As her leadership is tested, Bowser steps cautiously

BY MEAGAN FLYNN, JENNY GATHRIGHT AND OLIVIA GEORGE

D.C. Mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D) faced one of the greatest tests of her leadership in her decade-long tenure Monday as President Donald Trump took over the D.C. police department and deployed the D.C. National Guard onto city streets — a stunning moment in the history of the city’s limited self-rule.

For now, Bowser continued with the cautious approach she has taken over the past several months and said there is little the city could do to prevent Trump’s unprecedented actions. Although she disputed Trump’s characterization of D.C. as riddled with surging violence, the city will cooperate as the law requires, she said.

“My message to residents is this: We know that access to our democracy is tenuous — that is why you have heard me and many Washingtonians before me advocate for full statehood for the District of Columbia,” Bowser said, “and while this action today is unsettling and unprecedented, I can’t say that given some of the rhetoric of the past that we’re totally surprised.”

Fearing the kind of intervention that materialized Monday, Bowser has sought to avoid antagonizing the president with the kind of resistance that other Democratic mayors nationwide have not hesitated to display — in large part given D.C.’s unique vulnerability to federal intervention.

Bowser is presiding as a three-term mayor over the most drastic escalation in federal intervention in D.C. affairs in years. Not since the 1990s, when control of much of D.C.’s criminal justice system was permanently transferred to the federal government, and a federal control board oversaw city finances as it teetered on the edge of bankruptcy, has D.C. faced such intervention.

Speaking at the White House, Trump painted D.C. as a hellscape “overtaken by violent gangs and bloodthirsty criminals, roving mobs of wild youth, drugged-out maniacs and homeless people” and said his executive actions would “rescue our nation’s capital.”

Violent crime is down 26 percent compared with last year and has reached a 30-year low, according to police data, which Bowser pointed to Monday. “We’re not experiencing a spike in crime,” she said.

Trump is able to temporarily take control of D.C. police through a vague provision in the D.C. Home Rule Act, which gave D.C. residents the right to elect a mayor and council. By declaring that emergency special conditions exist, the president can require the mayor to “provide”

PRESIDENT WARNS OF PHYSICAL FORCE

Mayor says city has little choice but to cooperate

BY MICHAEL BIRNBAUM AND PERRY STEIN

President Donald Trump announced Monday that he was placing the D.C. police under direct federal control and will deploy the National Guard to the streets of Washington to fight crime, an extraordinary flex of federal power that stripped city leadership of its ability to make law enforcement decisions and could expose residents of the nation’s capital to unpredictable encounters with a domestically deployed military force.

The decision to take over the D.C. police and deploy 800 National Guard troops comes as the president has been slamming America’s cities as places where crime is out of control, despite two years of declines that have brought homicide levels in many major cities to their lowest levels in decades.

The administration has already mobilized FBI agents in recent days in overnight shifts to help local law enforcement prevent carjackings and violent crime, officials said. Because the District of Columbia is not a state, the federal government has unusually sweeping powers to intervene over the objections of its residents and leaders, giving the president an opportunity to use it as a laboratory for a militarized approach to urban crime-fighting.

Under the city’s Home Rule Act, the president can take over the D.C. police for a period of up to 30 days by declaring “special conditions of an emergency nature exist.” After that time, the police would revert to local control unless Congress passes a law to allow a longer period of federal control.

Whether the administration would want to extend the takeover beyond 30 days is unclear. In previous actions, including sending the National Guard to Los Angeles, Trump made high-profile declarations, then allowed the federal deployments

Security branch stealthily shapes Iran’s economy

BY YEGANEH TORBATI

One of the most successful companies to emerge from Iran’s decade-old start-up boom is a firm offering online classified ads similar to Craigslist that counts nearly half the country’s population as users.

But when the company, Divar, decided it wanted to go public on the Tehran stock exchange, Iran’s powerful Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps stepped in during the spring to block the move, objecting to the firm’s outspoken, independent-minded chairman, according to an internal letter he publicized last month.

The posting of the letter was remarkable in this secretive, authoritarian country. But behind the scenes, this kind of intervention by the IRGC in the Iranian economy has become common-

U.S. will get cut of sales to China by Nvidia, AMD

BY EVA DOU AND GRACE MOON

U.S.-based chipmakers Nvidia and Advanced Micro Devices have agreed to pay the United States 15 percent of their revenue from sales of artificial intelligence chips in China, a highly unusual arrangement that some experts warn may be unconstitutional.

Under the financial agreement, the companies will give the U.S. government a portion of their sales as a prerequisite to obtaining export licenses for China, according to three people familiar with the matter who spoke on the condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the matter in public.
