

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

TUESDAY, AUGUST 18, 2026

Prosecutors assert Clancy was in control

As defense presents its case, experts examine if state was able to sway jury

By Laura Crimaldi
and Sean Cotter
GLOBE STAFF

This story may contain content readers find disturbing or triggering. For help with postpartum mood disorders, the National Maternal Mental Health Hotline is free, confidential, and 24/7. Text or call 1-833-TLC-MAMA.

As the Lindsay Clancy murder trial enters its fourth week of testimony, the prosecution and defense agree that she strangled her three children. It's her state of mind during the killings that's being contested.

Prosecutors, who rested their case Monday after calling 71 witnesses, have insisted that she was in control and brought forth psychiatric providers who said Clancy didn't show signs of postpartum psychosis. They also called on Patrick Clancy, her then-husband, who described Lindsay Clancy as having one of her best days on the day of

Testimony for defense

Lindsay Clancy's mother spoke of the difficulties she was facing. B1.

the killings, even amid a stretch of deteriorating mental health.

However, opinions from legal experts The Boston Globe interviewed vary whether the prosecution has been successful in making its case to the jury.

Clancy's defense attorney, Kevin Reddington, contends she was in the throes of a psychotic break on Jan. 24, 2023, and under the command of a voice who told her to kill her children. During his cross examination of prosecution witnesses, Reddington has previewed the case he's been planning to mount. He asserts Clancy was overmedicated and misdiagnosed by psychiatric providers who failed to consult each other about their treatments, and missed signs of an impending psychotic break.

On Monday, he called his first set of witnesses, including Lindsay Clancy's mother, Paula Musgrove, who described her daughter as a dedicated and fun mother.

Three months before the killings, Musgrove said, Clancy texted her in a cry for help. Medication that she'd been taking for postpartum

CLANCY, Page A10

Lawmaker contradicts DHS on ICE death

Says intended target was victim's roommate, who did not have key removal order

By Giulia McDonnell Nieto del Rio
and Nick Stoico
GLOBE STAFF

BIDDEFORD, Maine — The man ICE agents appeared to be targeting when an officer fatally shot Johan Sebastián Durán Guerrero here last month did not have a final removal order, US Representative Chellie Pingree said Monday, contradicting the Department of Homeland Security's account of the operation.

The apparent target was Durán Guerrero's roommate, who owned the car Durán Guerrero was driving when he was killed, Pingree said during a Democratic congressional hearing in Maine examining the July 13 shooting. She said ICE still had not confirmed who was the target of the operation.

"In just the past few days, we have learned that ICE's intended target, Johan Sebastián's roommate and the owner of the car he was driving that morning, also did not have a final removal order," Pingree said.

She called the new information a "clear contradiction to what ICE and DHS have been saying about the operation."

The day of the shooting, DHS said ICE had been conducting "targeted surveillance on the last known address of an illegal alien with a final

ICE, Page A7

PHOTOS BY ERIN CLARK/GLOBE STAFF

Dr. Harsh Singh examined Lazar Mandinov, a pancreatic cancer patient, during an appointment at Massachusetts General Hospital late last month.

In darkest days of cancer, hope flickers

Mandinov left that appointment with new hope, packaged in three bottles. The experimental pill — daraxonrasib — has been shown to prolong the lives of several patients in latter stages of the disease.

Hailed as a breakthrough for sufferers of pancreatic tumors, experimental pill now available

By Allyson Chiu
GLOBE STAFF
and Emily Spatz
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

Lazar Mandinov stared at the small plastic bag containing three white pill bottles.

"It's a miracle," said Mandinov, 67, on a Friday earlier this month. He had waited two weeks for this visit to Mass General Brigham, where he's been receiving care since being diagnosed with Stage 4 pancreatic cancer in December.

The bag contained a month's worth of a new pancreatic cancer drug — an experimental pill that has been hailed as a breakthrough treatment for an infamously lethal cancer. Results from a late-stage clinical trial showed the medication could double the life expectancy of people with advanced dis-

CANCER, Page A7

Legacy of pain

Ex-drug kingpin's death prompts bitter reflections of troubled time in Roxbury

By Danny McDonald
GLOBE STAFF

"God" is dead, and his headquarters, once a tangible sign of his omnipresence in the neighborhood, is flattened into just another vacant lot in Grove Hall.

Darryl Whiting was a former Roxbury crack cocaine kingpin with an almighty nickname whose demise was once deemed a higher priority for federal law enforcement than that of the head of the New England Mafia. He died of natural causes earlier this month at the age of 71 in federal prison in Pennsylvania, where he was serving a life sentence.

Whiting's ruinous impact still scars parts of

WHITING, Page A10

Darryl Whiting

ISLAND HOPPING

STAN GROSSFELD/GLOBE STAFF

Jacques Tuset is dubbed the "King of Prison Island Swimming." He recently completed a series of swims from Boston Harbor islands and a peninsula, all of which had been prison sites. B1.

Local Head Start advocates sound the alarm over the Trump administration's plans to overhaul regulations on the early education program for vulnerable children. B1.

Despite rising costs battering hospitals' bottom lines, compensation for the chief executives of major health care systems in Massachusetts rose to new heights in 2024. D1.

President Trump, signaling his frustration at an inability to resolve a war with Iran that he started, lashed out at ally Oman. A3.

The Red Sox pounded out an 11-1 victory over the Arizona Diamondbacks at Fenway Park Monday night with relief ace Brayan Bello pitching 4 2/3 innings. C1.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:

BostonGlobe.com

Charge, bright brigade

Tuesday: Thunderstorm. High 75-80, low 65-70.

Wednesday: Sun returns. High 82-87, low 68-73.

Sunrise: 5:54. Sunset: 7:41.

Weather and comics, D5-6.

Obituaries, C8-9.

VOL. 310, NO. 49

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

0 947725 4