US bombs Iranian nuclear targets

Trump joins war, says Tehran can choose ‘peace or tragedy’

TEL AVIV — The United States struck three sites in Iran early Sunday, inserting itself into Israel’s war aimed at destroying the country’s nuclear program in a risky gambit to weaken a longtime foe despite fears of a wider regional conflict. Addressing the nation from the White House, President Trump asserted that Iran’s key nuclear were “completely and fully obliterated.” There was no independent damage assessment. It was not clear whether the US would continue attacking Iran alongside its ally Israel, which has been engaged in a nine-day war with Iran. Trump warned Iran that any reprisals against the US would be met with additional strikes.

“There will either be peace or there will be tragedy for Iran,” he said. The Atomic Energy Organization of Iran confirmed that attacks took place on its Fordo, Isfahan, and Natanz sites, but it insisted that its work will not be stopped. The decision to directly involve the US in the war comes after more than a week of strikes by Israel on Iran that aimed to systematically eradicate the country’s air defenses and offensive missile capabilities, while damaging its nuclear enrichment facilities. But US and Israeli officials have said that American stealth bombers and the 30,000-pound bunker-buster bomb they alone can carry offered the best chance of destroying heavily fortified sites connected to the Iranian nuclear program buried deep underground. “We have completed our very successful attack on the three Nuclear sites in Iran, including Fordow, Natanz, and Esfahan,” Trump said in a post on social

When the Chinese New Year arrived in January and the Year of the Snake dawned, business at Bulgari on Newbury Street saw a boost. Students in Boston hailing from foreign cities such as Shanghai and Chengdu took to the luxury jeweler to browse its “Serpenti” collection — diamond-and-gemstone encrusted baubles that start at $3,300 for the dainty viper earrings. “If something is trending or popular, many of the [international] students want

WASHINGTON — In a video launching his campaign for governor of Maine last month, Angus King III talked about his experience building a clean energy company before getting to the first thing people might know about him: his father. “If you know my dad,” King said, “you know my values.” Amid growing calls for a new generation of politicians, some running for office in 2026 are taking the sentiment literally.

King’s dad is Angus King Jr., the third-term US senator and former two-term governor of Maine, who remains one of the most popular politicians in the state. An entrepreneur and businessman, the younger King, 54, has not previously run for elected office or held any government position.

Jen Fowler comforted her son Dante, 12, during an episode at their home in Wakefield in February.

A promise unkept

Fifty years ago, the United States made a pledge: No child, no matter how complex their disability, would be deprived an education.

That pledge was never fulfilled.

WAKEFIELD — It was 10 a.m. on a Wednesday, and Dante Fowler was seated in his family’s living room for “circle time,” the official start to his school day. A children’s song chirruped from a nearby speaker: “Good morning! (Good morning!) How are you? (Just fine!)” Dante, a 12-year old with cropped brown hair and pale skin, stared listlessly across the room, his 78-pound body swallowed by the folds of a plush gray sofa. His mother sat at his side, filling in as a makeshift teacher. She sang along with the song, longing with every note to resuscitate her once bright-eyed boy. By this January day, more than a year had passed since Dante had been allowed to go to school with other kids. His local school said it could not educate him, because of his severe autism. Left to wait for a school to come along that would, Dante was all but educationally abandoned.

Circle time, emulating the structured carpet activity in grade school, had become part of his mother’s attempt to give her boy some semblance of a normal school day routine. But it only underscored Dante’s isolation: The solitary boy, a circle of one.

Dante, who uses a tablet to speak, finally responded to the song: “I feel,” he paused, with shoulders slumped, steel blue eyes downcast, “broken.” The tune trilled on.
