

High court strikes down most Trump tariffs

President loses his favorite tool to wrangle deals

BY CAT ZAKRZEWSKI,
ISAAC ARNSDORF
AND MICHAEL BIRNBAUM

The Supreme Court's decision to invalidate the Trump administration's broad tariffs strips the president of a central instrument of his foreign policy, undercutting his ability to coerce global leaders and reshape world order in his second term.

President Donald Trump and his aides have celebrated the tariffs as a foreign policy innovation, wielding the import taxes to extract concessions from other governments on issues that extend far beyond traditional trade negotiations. In the first week of his presidency, Trump threatened to impose 25 percent tariffs on all Colombian goods to pressure Bogotá to accept two deportation flights that Colombian President Gustavo Petro initially turned away.

Since then, he has threatened tariffs to advance his foreign policy goals in disputes over Greenland, Gaza and an influx of fentanyl ingredients from China. In a news conference Friday, Trump said he had used tariffs to settle five of the eight wars that he has claimed credit for ending, including a 10-day conflict between India and Pakistan.

"They were getting ready to do some bad things, but they've given us great national security, these tariffs have," Trump said, while standing under purple lighting in the White House briefing room.

The court decision could unsettle Trump's upcoming negotiations with world leaders, including in a visit to Beijing next

SEE TARIFFS ON A7

Prices: The ruling may not lead to immediate relief for consumers. A7

PETER W. STEVENSON/THE WASHINGTON POST

Donald Trump speaks Friday a few hours after the ruling. The president lashed out at the Supreme Court justices in unprecedented terms and said he would replace the import taxes the court overturned with a 10 percent global tariff and other levies using different laws.

"The President asserts the extraordinary power to unilaterally impose tariffs of unlimited amount, duration, and scope. In light of the breadth, history, and constitutional context of that asserted authority, he must identify clear congressional authorization to exercise it."

Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr.

"I'm ashamed of certain members of the court, absolutely ashamed, for not having the courage to do what's right for our country. ... They're very unpatriotic and disloyal to our Constitution."

President Donald Trump

Hearing on journalist's seized gear turns testy

Judge scolds DOJ lawyers who seek to search devices taken from home

BY PERRY STEIN

A federal judge in Virginia scolded Justice Department attorneys on Friday for not mentioning the 1980 Privacy Protection Act when they submitted their application for a warrant to search a Washington Post reporter's home and seize her devices.

The Privacy Protection Act limits the government's ability to search and seize journalists' materials.

"Did you not tell me intentionally or did you not know?" Magistrate Judge William Porter asked.

The testy exchange unfolded in the middle of a hearing to determine whether the government should be permitted to search through the devices seized from Post reporter Hannah Natanson — or whether the government must return those devices to Natanson without an extensive search.

The judge appeared inclined to find a middle ground that would allow the court to do a search of the devices on behalf of the government — and then hand infor-

SEE SEARCH ON A5

KIRILL KUDRYAVTSEV/AFP/GETTY IMAGES

Saving the best for last

Alex Ferreira celebrates his win Friday in the men's freestyle skiing halfpipe, adding a gold to his silver and bronze from the past two Games to "finish the rainbow," as his mother said. Olympics, B1

Trump talks peace as he rattles sabers at Iran

Split screen of bonhomie and belligerence strikes critics as incoherent

BY ADAM TAYLOR

President Donald Trump presided over Thursday's inaugural meeting of his Board of Peace, a new body he created to end the Middle East conflict, telling the smattering of world leaders and diplomats assembled in Washington that "there was nothing more important than peace."

Mostly unsaid, but lingering over the self-congratulatory proceedings, is every indication that Trump is preparing for war in the same region.

Thousands of miles away, the United States is gathering a massive amount of war-fighting machinery. U.S. officials have said that the Trump administration soon will be ready to use this firepower for an extended conflict against Iran, despite risks of entanglement in yet another Middle Eastern war.

The U.S. could strike Iran as soon as this weekend, although officials caution the president has not made a final decision. "They must make a deal," Trump said of Iran's leaders during the Board of Peace event. He added that if they do not, "bad things will happen."

On Friday morning, during a breakfast with governors at the White House, Trump appeared to confirm one option was a limited strike on Iran. "I guess I can say I am considering it," Trump told reporters.

Earlier Friday, Iranian Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi said that he expected Iran to have a draft deal ready "in the next two or

SEE IRAN ON A14

Investigation shows Meta's failure to protect kids from predators

BY IAN DUNCAN

When the mother of an 11-year-old girl discovered inappropriate Facebook messages from a man in her daughter's account, she contacted her local police. But the case was soon taken up by undercover investigators in New Mexico's Justice Department, who were working to understand how child predators operate on the site.

Man solicited a girl on Facebook, even after the company banned him

Using a decoy account of another girl, investigators connected with the man, 47-year-old Christopher Reynolds, who soon sent private messages with explicit photographs and talked about penetrating her. By April 2024, investigators had arrested Reynolds and charged him with solicitation of a minor, according to the state Justice Department.

Police have been running similar stings against individuals for years, but the authorities in New Mexico had a bigger target: They were building a case against Meta, Facebook's parent company, alleging that it knowingly put children at risk of sexual exploitation and violated state consumer protection laws.

As the case continued, Meta made a startling disclosure in a written response to questions from New Mexico's lawyers, according to a previously unreported court document. The 47-year-old had one of his accounts disabled in 2021 when the company discovered he was a registered sex offender — a category prohibited from having Facebook and Instagram accounts. Meta says it doesn't allow people to skirt bans by creating new accounts, but acknowledged that people deliberately evade its systems, even as they improve. Reynolds operated 15 other accounts, according to the court document.

Two other men, who were prosecuted as part of the investigation, were able to keep on using

SEE META ON A8

IN THE NEWS

Potomac spill D.C. officials plan to lift a wide advisory on March 2, the 21-day mark since raw wastewater last spilled into the river. B13

Minneapolis deaths A Democratic senator is pressing DHS to investigate whether derisive remarks about two citizens slain by federal agents have biased the shooting inquiries. A4

THE NATION
At 54 years old, curler Rich Ruohonen is the oldest American in the Winter Olympics. A2
Officials at Veterans Affairs halted plans to enforce a controversial rule on disability. A2

THE WORLD
D.C. protesters say they were attacked by guards of Azerbaijan's president. A12
Four journalists were detained in Cameroon while reporting on U.S. deportations. A12

THE ECONOMY
Delinquencies on student loans are nearly three times higher than before the pandemic, a new report found. A15
Wall Street, anticipating the earthquake ruling by the Supreme Court on Trump's tariffs, stayed calm and posted small gains. A15

SPORTS
The star-studded Canadian men's hockey team avoided disaster in a comeback to advance to the Olympic final. B1

STYLE
The "poop pipe" that caused 200 million gallons of sewage to spill into the Potomac wants to explain itself. B7

THE REGION
A judge's temporary restraining order has effectively blocked for now an April referendum on Virginia Democrats' redrawn maps. B13
A new banner of the president on the Justice Department's headquarters in D.C. is sparking criticism. B13

BUSINESS NEWS.....A15
COMICS.....B10
OBITUARIES.....B15
OPINION PAGES.....A16
TELEVISION.....B12
WORLD NEWS.....A11

CONTENT © 2026
The Washington Post
Year 149, No. 54499

