

Trump shifts strategy over deportations in Minn.

Amid anger after killing of nurse, he talks with Walz, Frey, changes leader

By Isaac Arnsdorf and Natalie Allison
WASHINGTON POST

President Trump on Monday softened his tone on immigration enforcement following another killing of an American citizen by federal officers — and amid growing calls for investigations — by expressing sorrow over the bloodshed and sending a new personal envoy to take charge in Minneapolis.

At the same time, the White House tried to pin the violence on Democratic-led jurisdictions that prohibit local cooperation with federal immigration authorities. The administration warned that the violence won't end until Democratic governors and mayors assist federal law enforcement in arresting, detaining, and deporting undocumented immigrants.

"Nobody in the White House, including President Trump, wants to see people getting hurt or killed in America's streets," White House press secretary Karoline Leavitt said Monday. "It is President Trump's hope and wish and demand for the resistance and chaos to end today."

She added, "The most peaceful way to carry out this vital public safety mission is for Republicans and Democrats to do it together, and for state and local law enforcement to work together with federal law enforcement."

The White House's more measured response to the shooting death of Alex Pretti on Saturday when compared with that of Renée Good earlier in January appears to shift the tone of an aggressive

MINNESOTA, Page A7

Arrests in Maine

The Department of Homeland Security said federal agents had arrested more than 200 people since last week's crackdown began. B1.

No help in Boston

ICE contacted Boston police 57 times last year to detain immigrants in the city, but the police ignored all of them, officials say. B4.

ICE heats up Maine primary for US Senate

Platner, Mills jockey over crackdown in streets

By Sam Brodey
GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — When Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents took to the streets of Portland and Lewiston last week, it meant that the most charged national story of the moment would soon dominate every move in Maine's hugely consequential US Senate race.

While the arrival of ICE has heaped additional scrutiny on Republican Senator Susan Collins's delicate maneuvering around President Trump's violent immigration crackdown, it has also served to more sharply define the Democratic contest to determine her challenger.

Both the leading Democratic candidates, Governor Janet Mills and Graham Platner, are being

SENATE, Page A7

STAN GROSSFELD/GLOBE STAFF

A South Boston shoveler navigated past buried cars. Gus Joyce, 9, (below) of Dorchester, had fun at Quincy's Presidents Golf Course.

Region digs out from its biggest snowstorm in years

Blockbuster blast of winter dumps nearly 2 feet of powder in some areas

By Kate Selig, Amanda Gokee, Steven Porter
GLOBE STAFF

and Lauren Albano
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

After a blockbuster weekend storm buried some New England cities and towns with nearly 2 feet of snow, residents dug out Monday and braced for another Arctic blast of dangerously low temperatures.

For many, it was also a day to revel in the snowy landscape for the first time in years.

The storm, the biggest to hit the region since 2022, dumped 20.2 inches on Boston, according to the National Weather Service. The highest totals in the state, 22 inches or more, were recorded along the coast and further west into Worcester and Middlesex counties.

The wintry blast was part of a far-reaching system that delivered heavy snow, bone-chilling temperatures, and icy conditions from Texas all the way to Maine. More than 6 million people, including

SNOW, Page A4

MATTHEW J. LEE/GLOBE STAFF

Healey's 'affordability agenda,' by the numbers

Governor's plans, from helping to buy homes to cutting utility bills, scrutinized

By Matt Stout
GLOBE STAFF

Speaking to a primetime audience last week, Governor Maura Healey teased new planks of a so-called "affordability agenda," offering a buffet of election-year plans — some short-term, some modest — that she said would help dull the pain on people's wallets.

Several drew applause inside the Massachusetts House chamber on Thursday, some prompted scoffs from her Republican opponents. Others drew yawns from experts.

The proposals were not the tax-cutting plans she previously championed and signed to help address what she called "the nightmare of high costs." But the numbers behind them offer some clue to how far they ultimately may go.

Home-buying assistance: 1,000

Healey said her administration is shifting $25 million into a first-time homebuyer assistance program, designed to loan families up to $25,000 — and some as much as $30,000 — to help cover down payments on new homes.

It'd mark a relatively dramatic expansion of the program. The state last year put $5 million toward the program, according to MassHousing, the quasi-public agency that administers the program. And the new funding could flow in quickly: Healey officials said they're tapping "available" capital funding to cover the costs, meaning it does not need approval from the Legislature.

Whom will it ultimately help? Officials say the funding would go toward covering costs for at least 1,000 new families to get into new homes, though the total number

HEALEY, Page A6

A cold digger

Tuesday: Clearing, cloudy, cold. High 20-25, low 6-11.

Wednesday: More sun, still cold. High 21-26, low 6-11.

Sunrise: 7:03. Sunset: 4:52.

Weather and comics, D5-6.

Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 309, NO. 27

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

The last time the Patriots and Seahawks met in the Super Bowl, it was a clash of the titans. This time, writes Christopher Gasper, it's a bizarre bowl. C1.

Several people died in the fiery plane crash in Bangor, Maine, during the snowstorm but the exact number of victims remained unclear. B1.

The remains of the last Israeli captive in Gaza have been recovered, paving the way for the next stage in a fragile cease-fire. A3.

Virginia Oliver, Maine's 105-year-old lobsterwoman, has died. Health issues finally kept her ashore at age 103. B1.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:

BostonGlobe.com

From premier passer to prolific pitchman

Does the '12' after 'TB' stand for the number of items Brady is hawking?

By Beth Teitell
GLOBE STAFF

At first I assumed I was hallucinating, like some bot gone mad. Because there, on TV, was Tom Brady, the original anti-inflammatory influencer himself — the man whose avocado ice cream I made for my sons, with hope in my heart; whose command to limit nightshades, whatever they are, I tried to follow — only now somehow he was starring in a commercial for ... Pizza Hut???

Let's take a listen: "You know what I miss most about playing?" Brady-as-pizza-delivery-guy asks as he strides toward a house. "Yelling 'hut!'"

PHOTO ILLUSTRATION BY LUIS G. RENDON/GLOBE STAFF; COURTESY DUNKIN', HERTZ, PIZZA HUT, AND SUBWAY

BRADY, Page A6