

Chicago Tribune

★

$4.00 | MONDAY, MAY 25, 2026 | CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

The children of Bill and Corrinne Borchers, both of whom died in the crash of American Airlines Flight 191, Kim Jockl, from left, Melody Smith and Jim Borchers, speak in Des Plaines about their journey following their parents' death. STACEY WESCOTT/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

‘A little respect’ for Flight 191

47 years later, the crash site near O’Hare Airport is slated to become part of a tollway. Some families of the 273 victims are pushing for a memorial marker there

By Talia Soglin | CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Twenty-five years after American Airlines Flight 191 crashed in an open field near O’Hare International Airport, a daughter of two of the dead brought rose petals to the land where the plane went down.

For more than two decades, Kim Borchers Jockl hadn’t known where, precisely, the plane had crashed. Her parents, Bill and Corrinne Borchers, were two of the 273 people who died in the disaster on May 25, 1979.

For years, Jockl remembered, she hadn’t really wanted to look, even though she often drove nearby. “It was like a bad story,” she said.

Today, the site is slated to become part of the new Interstate 490 tollway, a new chapter that brings its own emotional disquiet for some family members of crash victims. But in the early 2000s it was just a field.

Jockl and her older siblings, Melody Smith and Jim Borchers, went searching for it as the 25th anniversary of the crash approached.

Smoke billows from the wreckage of American Airlines Flight 191 after it crashed less than a mile from the runway at O’Hare International Airport in 1979. MICHAEL LAUGHLIN/FOR THE TRIBUNE

Jockl had decided that something needed to be done to mark the lives of the victims. The first step was finding the place where it — the deadliest aviation disaster on U.S. soil, excluding the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks — happened.

With the help of the manager of a nearby mobile home park, Jockl and her siblings found the crash site just north of the airport.

For the anniversary of the crash in 2004, they visited the site with family members of some other crash victims whom they had tracked down. Together the group made a pilgrimage to the crash site.

Jockl had copied the obituaries of the dead from local newspapers and cut their

See FLIGHT on Page A5

Trump says not to rush Iran deal

Few details emerge on effort to end war, reopen blocked strait

By Samy Magdy and Melanie Lidman
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO — The United States is close to reaching a deal with Iran that would end the war, reopen the Strait of Hormuz and see Iran give up its stockpile of highly enriched uranium, regional officials said Sunday. They said details and time-lines would be worked out later.

Iran has not publicly committed to giving up its uranium, a key demand of President Donald Trump, who on Saturday said a deal had been “largely negotiated,” after calls with Israel and other regional allies. The sides have previously seemed close to a deal in recent weeks only to see diplomacy falter.

“The negotiations are proceeding in an orderly and constructive manner, and I have informed my representatives not to rush into a deal,” Trump said on social media Sunday. He said the U.S. relationship with Iran is becoming “much more professional and productive.”

The agreement will not be signed Sunday, according to a person familiar with the status of negotiations who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The strait’s reopening would begin to ease a worldwide energy crisis sparked by the U.S. and Israeli bombardment of Iran on Feb. 28, which led Tehran to effectively close the waterway. Prices have spiked for oil, gas and several related products, shocking the world economy. Experts say it would take several weeks or even months for shipping and prices to recover once the strait is reopened.

The U.S. has blockaded Iranian ports for over a month, and Trump on Sunday said the blockade “will remain in full force and effect until an agreement is reached, certified and signed.”

Secretary of State Marco Rubio, on a visit to India, said that “significant progress, although not final progress, has been made” in negotiations, and the world would no

See IRAN on Page A9

Bike lane construction sparks pushback, fuels political fights

A neighborhood’s clash over an Archer Avenue street project is the latest front in citywide divide

By Jake Sheridan
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Cars whiz past, a few bikes too, as concrete bumpers and painted lines slowly grow at the edge of the busy street.

But as reliably as time passes, the two groups show up to the sidewalk, stand there a few feet apart and yell.

The protesters and counter-protesters who have demonstrated every week since early December share a belief that an effort to overhaul a bustling 2-mile stretch of Archer Avenue in Brighton Park with pedestrian-friendly features will have massive consequences.

And the small, relentless South-west Side fight is over more than just that construction project. It’s the latest front in a citywide political divide over the future of transportation and safety.

To the pro-bike lane faction, the concrete bump outs and bus-boarding islands added to the busy street mean safety for cyclists, kids heading to school and even drivers.

“People don’t bike on Archer because it was so dangerous,” said Alfredo Valladares Jr., who founded the group Gage Park Cyclists. “Everybody needs to have a fair opportunity to be safe.”

Their opponents say the changes mark a force-fed death knell for businesses losing parking spots and a wasteful impediment to people with places to be who need to drive.

“It’s the first phase of gentrification,” said Claudia Zuno, a lead opponent of the road redesign who announced in February that she is running to unseat 12th Ward Ald. Julia Ramirez, a supporter of the project. “It’s a lack of transparency. It’s a lack of communication.”

It’s a clash playing out with similar intensity along Grand Avenue in the West Town neighborhood, where a growing street remake has rankled businesses and rallied pedestrian safety advocates to its defense.

Both projects are part of the citywide Chicago Department of

See LANES on Page A2

DOMINIC DI PALERMO/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Remembering the fallen

Memorial Day observances are already underway in the Chicago area. A ceremony Sunday at the DuPage County Veterans’ Memorial recognized 26 county residents who were killed in conflicts at home or abroad. Story in Chicagoland, Page 3

Latin rave on the rise

As crowds packed Sueños Music Festival for reggaetón and regional Mexican music, another sound took hold. Arts & Living, B5

Wildcats win lacrosse title

The Northwestern women defeated North Carolina for their ninth title. They are the first team in 40 years to win it at home. Sports, C1

SUBSCRIPTION

Visit myaccount.chicagotribune.com or call 312-546-7900 to sign up for a subscription. To place an ad, visit placeanad.chicagotribune.com.

WEATHER FORECAST

TODAY H: 84 L: 60
TUE. H: 87 L: 63
WED. H: 84 L: 58
Complete details on Page A12

INDEX

Almanac A9
Arts & Living B5
Comics B8-9
Crossword B9
Editorials A6
Horoscope B8
Nation & World B1
Obituaries A9
Television B7

178th year No. 145
© Chicago Tribune

