The US has approved sales of tens of thousands of advanced AI semiconductors to Emirati AI firm G42 and Saudi Arabia’s Humain, in a major boost for both Gulf nations’ ambitions to become formidable players in the technology. Each company is slated to receive AI chips with the computing power equivalent to 35,000 GB300 processors from Nvidia Corp., the chipmaker’s most advanced offering, according to the US Commerce Department. The deal is contingent on both companies meeting “rigorous security and reporting requirements”, the agency said. “This announcement marks a defining moment for G42 and our partners as we move from planning into execution,” said G42 group CEO Peng Xiao. The development speeds up the foundational projects already underway in the UAE, including Stargate UAE, the 1-gigawatt AI compute cluster being built by G42 for OpenAI in partnership with Oracle, Cisco, NVIDIA, and SoftBank Group, which is part of the larger UAE-US AI Campus, a 5-gigawatt AI infrastructure hub designed to deliver compute capacity and low-latency inferencing for the wider region. It also supports the expansion of technology collaborations with leading US hyperscalers and chipmakers, including Microsoft, AMD, Qualcomm, Cerebras, and others. Khaldoon Khalifa Al Mubarak, secretary general of Artificial Intelligence and Advanced Technology Council, added: “This decision affirms the depth of trust that underpins the UAE-US relationship. It reflects a shared strategic outlook.” — with inputs from agencies
