

For Harvard, hard lessons drawn from Columbia

An early target of president, NYC university still reeling despite many concessions

By Anjali Huynh
GLOBE STAFF

There are few recent precedents for Harvard to look to as it faces off against President Trump in a dispute cast as a turning point for academic freedom. There is one example, however, of what Harvard may be hoping to avoid.

INSIDE
THE WAR ON
HARVARD

Columbia University remains under intense federal scrutiny after isolating itself among its peers with policy shifts designed to restore $400 million in revoked federal funding.

The New York City university made new rules governing student discipline and protests, brought in officials to oversee programs the president targeted, and pledged to expand the “intellectual diversity” of faculty. Many in academia condemned those actions, seen as capitulation to a government they consider hostile to the principles of their fields.

What did Columbia get in return? So far, not much. Though Trump’s tone on Columbia has brightened, his administration still hit the school with a civil rights violation and threatened its accreditation. The canceled funding has not been

COLUMBIA, Page A5

►Harvard professors’ union opposes any deal between school and Trump, members say. B1.

A pause for a community under pressure

LGBTQ group home relies on peers to help ease mental health crises

By Jason Laughlin
GLOBE STAFF

Emery Grady describes herself, somewhat jokingly, as a “big, strong gal.”

In fact, Emery Grady is slight and short, barely over 5 feet tall. She has been through a lot, including mental health challenges, alcoholism, and periods of sex work. Yet a recent traumatic experience too difficult to discuss in detail left the 32-year-old shattered.

“These things happen, and it makes me feel weak and alone and afraid,” Grady said to a small group of other guests of a new group home in Holyoke, clasping her shaking hands.

Five of the six gathered in that kitchen were, like Grady, trans; all had experienced their own mental health challenges.

Grady is among the first guests at Anemoni, a new LGBTQ-focused residential home offering

GROUP HOME, Page A10

JIM VONDRUSKA/GETTY IMAGES

Rescue workers dug through debris Sunday following the flash flooding in Hunt, Texas.

Search for survivors, answers

More rains complicate efforts; dozens still missing near swollen Texas rivers

JASON FOCHTMAN/HOUSTON CHRONICLE VIA AP

People comforted each other outside the Butt-Holdsworth Memorial Library in Kerrville, Texas.

Vacancies at weather service

Officials say the lack of workers at offices near the flooded regions would not have affected forecasting but could have complicated communication efforts with local officials. A6.

By Jim Vertuno
and John Seewer

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KERRVILLE, Texas — In the morning, families sifted through waterlogged debris and stepped inside empty cabins Sunday at Camp Mystic, an all-girls summer camp ripped apart by flash floods. In the afternoon, another warning came.

Move to higher ground, away from the Guadalupe River, an emergency alert urged. Another band of torrential rain gave officials a “high confidence of river flooding.”

Rescuers’ search for 10 girls and a counselor still missing for the camp would be slowed once more. So, too, would the families’ search for answers.

The 11 were among 41 missing people, according to Texas Governor Greg Abbott. At least 79 people had been killed since Friday, when massive rains overwhelmed the Guadalupe River and other waterways in southern Texas.

Kerr County in Texas Hill Country was hit the worst. Searchers have found the bodies of 68 people, including 28 children, in the county, home to Camp Mystic and other youth camps near the river.

Sheriff Larry Leitha pledged to keep searching until “everybody is found.”

Eleven other deaths were reported in Travis, Burnet, Kendall, Tom Green, and Williamson counties, according to local officials. The death toll is certain to rise over the next few days, said Colonel Freeman Martin of the Texas Department of Public Safety.

The governor warned Sunday that the additional rounds of heavy rains would last into Tuesday, potentially producing more

FLOODS, Page A6

A few hurdles on Netanyahu, Trump’s victory lap

By Isabel Kershner
NEW YORK TIMES

JERUSALEM — For Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu of Israel, the meeting with President Trump scheduled for Monday will serve as a kind of victory lap after the joint Israeli-US assault last month on Iran’s nuclear facilities.

The White House visit — the prime minister’s third since Trump returned to office — is likely to add luster to Netanyahu’s laurels, especially with his voters back home, analysts said, as he soon heads into an election year.

But such trips have yielded surprises in the past.

The last time Netanyahu was in the Oval Office, in April, he sat somewhat awkwardly at Trump’s side as the president announced that Washington would be engaging in “direct” talks with Iran in a last-ditch effort to rein in the country’s nuclear program. That month, Netanyahu tried to convince Trump that the time was right for a military assault on Iran, but he was swatted down.

This time, Trump is eager to advance a cease-fire deal for the Gaza Strip that would see Hamas release hostages and would ultimately end the long war in the Palestinian enclave that was set off by the Hamas-led Oct. 7, 2023, attack on Israel. On Sunday, Israel sent negotiators to Qatar, a mediating country, to try to bridge differences with Hamas.

The United States said it was also brokering talks between Israel and Syria aimed at restoring calm along their frontier.

Then there is the unfinished business with Iran, given the varying assessments of how far Israel’s

MIDEAST, Page A7

Less-than-sparkling past of an urban gem

Once a dump, now a delight, Danehy Park offers an oasis to Cantabrigians

By Danny McDonald
GLOBE STAFF

CAMBRIDGE — A family spreads out a blanket to picnic. Runners jog around a track. A kid lines up a row of soccer balls and pings them goalward. Dogs of various breeds and sizes bound through the grass.

On a recent summer day, there were no hints of the space’s former identities: a pit where men labored for the raw material that helped shape the region’s buildings, a landfill where malodorous trash was dumped, a spot to store dirt from a transformative transportation project.

Instead, there are rolling, manicured hills. Athletic fields and playgrounds. Even a Miyawaki forest, dense plantings intended to boost biodiversity and climate resilience — the first of its kind in the northeastern United States.

Celebrating its 35th year, Danehy Park is considered by many to be an extraordinary urban planning success story, a jewel of green space, the type of neighborhood anchor that residents couldn’t now imagine living without.

PARK, Page A10

DANIELLE PARHIZKARAN/GLOBE STAFF

Celebrating its 35th year, Danehy Park is considered by many to be an extraordinary urban planning success story.

Rays; a ruckus

Monday: Early sun, hot. High 88-93, low 73-78.

Tuesday: Storms move in. High 84-89, low 67-72.

Sunrise: 5:15. Sunset: 8:23.

Weather and comics, D4-5.

Obituaries, C9.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:

BostonGlobe.com

VOL. 308, NO. 7

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

Governor Maura Healey’s renovation plan for the state’s nearly 150-year-old women’s prison in Framingham has drawn criticism from advocates who say it represents a wrongheaded commitment to incarcerating women in the state. B1.

Zohran Mamdani, the winner of the Democratic primary for mayor in New York City, pitches affordability programs that echo some policies in Boston. D1.

It was the Red Sox bats that were booming on this Fourth of July weekend sweep of the Washington Nationals. C1.

A series of shark sightings closed parts of a famed New York beach at the height of the holiday weekend. A2.

Russia and Ukraine exchanged hundreds of drones as Western nations prepared to restock Kyiv’s supplies. A4.