FINALLY! PATIENTS TO BE PUT BEFORE NHS BUREAUCRATS

9,300 jobs to go as ministers scrap NHS England, the 'world's biggest quango', to improve care and crack down on wokery

THOUSANDS of jobs faced the axe last night after Sir Keir Starmer announced NHS England will be scrapped in a bid to slash red tape.

He hopes that ditching the 'world's largest quango' will save hundreds of millions of pounds a year that can be spent on patients instead.

The Government said NHS England duplicates work done by officials at the Department of Health and Social Care.

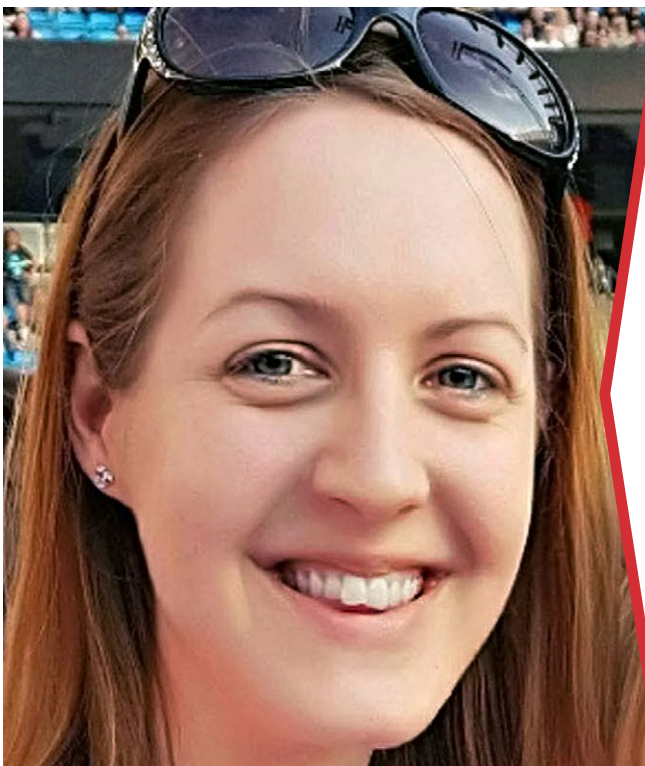

Half the 18,600 office staff employed by the two organisations will be lost, with the funds redirected to doctors, nurses and frontline services. This will help to cut waiting lists and improve care, Sir Keir claimed yesterday.

Ministers are understood to be adamant that the reorganisation will change the NHS,
