

Mostly sunny 92/74 • Tomorrow: Hot, humid 99/78 B6

Democracy Dies in Darkness

SATURDAY, JUNE 21, 2025 • $4

PHOTOS BY MICHAEL ROBINSON CHÁVEZ/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

For migrants, a new land of hope

BY ANTHONY FAIOLA

MADRID — When night falls on the other side of the Atlantic, her 32-year-old cousin, a house cleaner in New York, huddles inside a dim basement apartment, terrified of ICE raids. But in a burgeoning quarter of the Spanish capital, where immigrant-staffed restaurants tempt newcomers with Dominican chicharrones and Venezuelan empanadas, Edith Chimbo sat in the sunlight, musing about the Spanish Dream.

“My cousin told me, ‘Go to Spain,’” said Chimbo, 22, who landed in Madrid earlier this year from the Ecuadorian highlands. Armed with a college degree but no work permit, she’s cleaning houses under the table, just like her cousin in the United States. Yet she is counting on something in the weeks ahead that her kin almost certainly cannot: legalization.

Spain opens its doors as U.S. cracks down, giving a boost to its fast-growing economy

FROM TOP: People wait at a bus stop this month in the largely Latino neighborhood of Oporto in Madrid. A mother and daughter from Ecuador walk their dogs this month in Madrid.

“Here,” she said, “we have hope.”

As the Trump administration’s crackdown on immigrants and asylum seekers brings tear gas, protests and raids to the streets of the United States, Spain is positioning itself as a counterpoint: a new land of opportunity.

In this nation of 48 million with long colonial links to the New World, an influx of predominantly Latin American immigrants is helping fuel one of the fastest-growing economies in Europe. The Spanish economic transformation is unfolding as the center-left government of Prime Minister Pedro Sánchez has streamlined immigration rules while offering legal status to roughly 700,000 irregular migrants since 2021.

A landmark bill now being negotiated in the Congress of Deputies could grant legal amnesty to hundreds of thousands

SEE SPAIN ON A10

Iran turns down Europe’s overture

PARTIES SAY THEY ARE OPEN TO MORE TALKS

Diplomats urge Tehran to restrict nuclear activities

BY ELLEN FRANCIS AND CLAIRE PARKER

GENEVA — European foreign ministers pressed their Iranian counterpart on Friday for curbs to Tehran’s nuclear program, but the high-stakes meeting in Geneva yielded no quick off-ramp from the conflict in which President Donald Trump is threatening to bomb Iranian nuclear sites.

Hours of talks at a luxury hotel ended without a breakthrough, officials said, even as all the ministers came out declaring their readiness to keep talking. The clock is ticking, though: Trump has set a two-week deadline to decide whether the United States will join Israel in the military campaign it launched last week vowing to cripple Iran’s nuclear sites. Trump on Friday said that “two weeks would be the maximum.”

Washington is now in a stand-off with Tehran over whether Iran should be allowed to enrich uranium at all, even for civilian purposes. After Friday’s meeting, European ministers said they had pushed Tehran to restrict nuclear activities and negotiate with Washington, while Iran’s foreign minister countered that Israeli strikes must stop before Tehran resumes any bargaining with the White House.

A European diplomat, who spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss sensitive

SEE IRAN ON A4

In harm’s way: Hundreds of U.S. citizens in Iran flee for safety. A4

Air defense: Israel’s multilayered system fends off most attacks. A6

Behind Trump’s pause: A battle to bend his ear

Competing voices in recent days weighed in on possible U.S. attack

BY NATALIE ALLISON

Four days after President Donald Trump abruptly left a summit of global leaders in Canada, calling on civilians to “evacuate Tehran” and stoking global talk of war, the president on Friday said he still wanted more time to decide.

Trump said he was waiting to see “whether or not people come to their senses.” He also would not commit to calling for a ceasefire as negotiations continue. Speaking to reporters as he headed to his New Jersey golf club for a fundraiser for his super PAC, the president reiterated the threat posed by Iran’s nuclear program but said he was “not going to talk about” what a hypothetical U.S. response would look like.

Indeed, besides a brief gaggle after exiting Air Force One, Trump spent much of the day Friday trying to shift public attention to anything but Iran. He and his White House team posted on social media about the need to pass his One Big Beautiful Bill. Trump called for a special prosecutor to investigate the 2020 election, posted repeatedly about the charges that the Justice Department under President Joe Biden had brought against him and wrote that he expected a federal settlement with Harvard University soon.

In recent days, a relentless battle for Trump’s ear has swirled around the president. As he often does, Trump has picked up the phone for — and received advice from — prominent voices pushing

SEE TRUMP ON A6

Bound in handcuffs, determined to resist

BY TOLUSE OLORUNNIPA

A growing number of Democratic officials are being arrested in tense situations with federal agents over immigration, raising their profiles in a party angry with President Donald Trump’s policies.

Images of Democratic officials bound in handcuffs, jostling in scrums with immigration officers or standing defiantly on courthouse steps have ricocheted across the internet in recent weeks, creating some new political battle lines in Trump’s second term. New York City Comptroller Brad Lander, a mayoral candidate, was the latest Democratic elected official to be arrested after he tried to escort a defendant from his appearance at an immigration court this week.

Arrests show Democrats’ defiance of Trump — and raise their profiles

While many Democrats contend the frequency of these confrontations reflects the Trump administration’s harsh law enforcement tactics, party lawmakers and strategists also say they show how leaders are responding to Democratic voters’ desire for a robust resistance that goes beyond staid speeches and statements.

“In this moment of time, we have to find our political courage,” Rep. LaMonica McIver (D-New Jersey), who was indicted last month for allegedly assaulting two federal agents during a

SEE ARREST ON A2

Columbia protester released on judge’s order

BY JOANNA SLATER

Former Columbia University student Mahmoud Khalil was freed from detention on Friday after a federal judge ordered his release, ruling that the government’s efforts to keep him in custody were highly unusual and potentially a form of punishment for his political views.

Khalil was the first noncitizen activist to be arrested and detained by the Trump administration this year as it launched a crackdown on what it said was antisemitism on college campuses.

Suggests ‘highly unusual’ detention is reprisal for Khalil’s political views

Khalil, a legal permanent resident, was arrested in New York in March and flown to an Immigration and Customs Enforcement detention center in Louisiana. In April, his wife gave birth to their first child, Deen.

U.S. District Judge Michael Farbiarz of New Jersey said Friday that prosecutors had not provided a legitimate justification for Khalil’s continued detention.

The government’s bid to keep Khalil detained based on a relatively minor alleged immigration infraction when he is neither a flight risk nor a danger to the community is “highly, highly, highly unusual,” Farbiarz said.

The facts of the case suggest that there is “at least something to the underlying claim” that the government is using the immigration system to punish Khalil for his activism, the judge said. “And

SEE KHALIL ON A2

How 280,000 eggs were stolen in a scramble over prices, profits

ILLUSTRATION BY MARIA ALCONADA BROOKS/THE WASHINGTON POST; ROBB HILL AND AMY LYNN POWELL, FOR THE WASHINGTON POST; ISTOCK

Industry giant Cal-Maine was posting record earnings when the company was hit by one of the biggest egg thefts in history. A8-9

IN THE NEWS

Venue-shopping The Supreme Court ruled that e-cigarette companies, when challenging FDA denials, are allowed to appeal to courts that are far from their headquarters. A3

The next step Two longtime friends celebrated their last day of eighth grade — and braced themselves for high school. B1

THE NATION President Donald Trump can keep the National Guard in Los Angeles for now, a federal appeals court ruled, overturning an order that said he violated the Constitution. A3

THE WORLD British lawmakers in the House of Commons narrowly passed a bill that would legalize assisted dying in England and Wales, following an impassioned, four-hour debate. A5

THE ECONOMY Cigarette-makers are wrestling over the fate of a tax break for tobacco producers in Trump’s tax and spending bill. A7
Russian President Vladimir Putin, responding to warnings at an economic forum, said a recession won’t be allowed in his country. A7

THE REGION The District’s attorney general filed suit against a violence intervention group, alleging that the nonprofit’s founder mispent funds. B1
A brutal and prolonged heat wave will take hold of the region next week, when humidity could make it feel 110. B1

STYLE At a summit for conservative young women, defining what constitutes success in life can be complicated. C1

SPORTS As high school pitchers chase velocity, the stress on their arms is catching up to them in the form of injuries. D1

BUSINESS NEWS.....A7
COMICS.....C5
OBITUARIES.....B4
OPINION PAGES.....A11
TELEVISION.....C4
WORLD NEWS.....A5

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post
Year 148, No. 54254

