

Tariffs on metals stoke trade war

25% levy takes effect, drawing retaliation

By Ana Swanson and Jeanna Smialek
NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — President Trump's sweeping tariffs on foreign steel and aluminum went into effect Wednesday, inviting immediate retaliation from the European Union and escalating tensions with other trading partners reeling from his on-and-off approach to steep trade penalties.

Trump's tariffs of 25 percent hit metal imports from every country that sells steel and aluminum to the United States. Many domestic steel and aluminum makers support the move, saying it will help protect their industry against foreign competitors. But the tariffs are expected to raise costs for US businesses that use foreign metals, including manufacturers of cars, canned food and drinks, solar panels, and other products.

Some trading partners have vowed to retaliate by issuing levies aimed at hurting US exporters. Canada, a major supplier of metal in the United States, said it would impose new retaliatory tariffs on $20 billion worth of American imports, including metals, computers, and sporting goods. And the EU swiftly announced tariffs on up to $28 billion worth of US goods, including bourbon, boats, and motorcycles.

Those conflicts could spiral into even bigger trade wars. Asked Wednesday if he would retaliate against the EU tariffs, Trump said, "Of course I will respond."

Many other governments

TARIFFS, Page A7

Shaheen retiring, and N.H. race is on

Senator lauded as trailblazer; seat will be hotly contested

GLOBE FILE/2024

Jeanne Shaheen was the first woman in the US elected to serve as both governor and senator.

By Amanda Gokee, Tal Kopan, and Sam Brodey
GLOBE STAFF

CONCORD, N.H. — Soon after Democratic Senator Jeanne Shaheen announced on Wednesday that she would not seek reelection in 2026, many New Hampshire political figures were quick to laud her as a trailblazer — and just as quick to hint they might run for the position.

Shaheen's departure marks just the second time since 1992 that the state will have an open Senate seat. While Democrats hold all of the state's congressional seats and Republicans are in firm control of state offices, her announcement leaves the GOP with a rare opportunity in a swing state that has, in recent years, turned a redder shade of purple.

Both of New Hampshire's current House members may also enter the race, which would mean more open — and potentially competitive — seats down the ballot as well.

Shaheen was the first woman elected to serve as both governor and senator in the United States. She was New Hampshire's first female governor, serving from 1997 through 2003, and at 78, is now in her third term as a senator.

"I ran for public office to make a difference for the people of New Hampshire. That purpose has never, and will never, change," she said in a video announcing her retirement.

When Shaheen last ran for her Senate seat in 2020, she defeated her Republican challenger by about 16 points. But given the Republican gains and President Trump's strong showing in

SHAHEEN, Page A6

More than 20,000 people are experiencing homelessness in Greater Boston. A vast majority of them — roughly 70 percent — are families, in large part because of the state's right-to-shelter law.

SUZANNE KREITER/GLOBE STAFF

Karyn M., who had been living in shelters since July, checked out her room, provided through a new housing program for women in the Boston area overseen by Women's Lunch Place.

A HELPING HAND ON WAY TO A HOME

Program offers women their own room for 6 months as they seek housing

By Esmy Jimenez
GLOBE STAFF

For Karyn M., clutching the keys to her own room for the first time brought on a strange combination of grief over her past and gratitude for what's next.

Since being evicted from her apartment in July 2024, the 57-year-old had spent months living in Boston shelters. She had been trying to find some semblance of the stability she had before her life began to unravel — before she lost her job, her housing, and much of her belongings.

►Residence for formerly homeless people opens in Jamaica Plain. D1.

It's why, on a recent Monday, while standing in her private room, she felt grateful.

"It's not much, but it's mine," she said, looking around at the furniture, which included a full-sized bed and dresser.

The unit came courtesy of a new housing program overseen by Women's Lunch Place that provides single rooms to 50 women for six months. The initiative is a short-term solution for Karyn and other women experiencing homelessness in the Boston area, a population

HOMELESSNESS, Page A4

'We will have wraparound services to support them in their housing journey and we anticipate that we will have a very high success rate in stabilizing women.'

JENNIFER HANLON WIGON, chief executive of Women's Lunch Place

ERIN CLARK/GLOBE STAFF

Jackeline Dixon, who was displaced by a fire, lives in transitional housing in the South End. She spends much of her time at Women's Lunch Place. Here, she sat with friend Sandro Alves at a barbershop.

A WARNING BY COLUMBIA

International students were told the school could not protect them from the government. A5.

ENVIRONMENTAL RULES TARGETED

Agency leader Lee Zeldin called it the "most consequential day of deregulation in American history." A2.

HARVARD SUIT

Two doctors are suing the Trump administration for removing their research from a website because they referred to LGBTQ+ people. B1.

Guilty as charged

Liberals with Teslas are now willing to take a hit just to unload them

By Beth Teitell
GLOBE STAFF

On the surface, the magnets on the rear bumper of Rachel Segall's Tesla seem funny. "Here for zero emissions, not Elon," reads one. "Bought it before we knew how awful he is," proclaims another.

But in reality? They're a cri de coeur.

Segall, a therapist in Newton, bought the car because she wanted to drive an electric vehicle. But now, instead of making her feel good about doing her part for the Earth, it also represents something she does not like — namely Elon Musk, with his alleged Nazi salutes, and what she sees as his cruel slashing of the government and people's jobs.

At times, Segall said, she's felt almost desperate to sell the car. But the dealer offered her so little for it — a 2023 Model 3, in excellent condition — that she has decided to try and sell it herself on Facebook Marketplace, albeit at a loss.

"I'm willing to lose $5,000 for emotional betterment," Segall said, noting that while she awaits a buyer, she's reduced to taking the only action she can — adding ever more anti-Musk magnets.

TESLAS, Page A6

Marching on Thursday: Cloudy, cool. High 38-43. Low 34-39.

Friday: Some sun, milder. High 44-49. Low 37-42.

High tide: 11:44 a.m.

Sunrise: 6:59 Sunset: 6:48

Weather and Comics, D5-6. Obituaries, C9.

Health care spending in Massachusetts soared 8.6 percent to $78.1 billion in 2023, more than double the benchmark set by the state. D1.

Inflation eased more than expected last month, a welcome sign for the Fed. D1.

The Isabella Stewart Gardner

Museum is marking 35 years since the still-unsolved art theft by restoring one of the empty frames. B1.

The Ukraine-US cease-fire proposal complicates matters for President Vladimir Putin. A3.

The Celtics dropped a big one to Oklahoma City, 118-112. C1.

VOL. 307, NO. 72

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

10416

0 947725 4