

Chicago Tribune

$4.00 | SATURDAY, JULY 18, 2026 | CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

Band's impromptu shows along the lakefront draw crowds from across Midwest, with picnic blankets lining a city block's worth of Belmont Rocks like patchwork

Busking in the sun

By Tess Kenny | CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Growing up, Tanner Dane and his best-friends-turned-bandmates used to spend hours and hours jamming in his Elgin attic. Like any aspiring musicians, they started with covers. But it didn't take long to cultivate their own sound: a bluesy, alternative rock, soul-inspired sort of mix.

Soon enough, they were self-producing their own music on GarageBand. They'd burn the tunes onto CDs, scribble them with — admittedly — terrible handwriting immortalized in Sharpie and drop the discs all over town.

It wasn't a full-blown marketing campaign by any means, but they paid no mind. They just loved to play.

Some two decades later, Dane is still embodying that homegrown approach, one free lake show at a time.

Today, he is a Chicago-based artist pursuing his career both as a solo performer and with his band, Holly. And for the past summer and a half, Dane and his bandmates — including a few of the people he grew up playing with in Elgin — have been gaining local notoriety busking at AIDS Garden Chicago in Lakeview. Since the impromptu shows started just over a year ago, they've garnered so much traction that fans by the hundreds turn out to see them perform.

"We're literally just busking," Dane said in an interview, speaking to the sensation of it all.

Crowds have comprised people young and old, parents with their kids, even commuters from

Singer and guitarist

Tanner Dane performs with his band Holly along Lake Michigan near AIDS Garden Chicago on July 8. The pop-up show was the third performance Dane has held with his band along the lake. ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/TRIBUNE

Indianapolis and Wisconsin. The street performances are consciously announced on short notice, usually a day or two before showtime on Instagram or TikTok — a true modern pop-up, if you will, despite expectant fans flooding the musicians' social media lately with inquiries into when the next installation will be.

They have staged three performances this summer, the most recent earlier this month. The latest show had attendees packing Belmont Rocks as far as the length of a city block, picnic blankets lining the stone steps like patchwork.

See BUSKING on Page A4

MAINE ICE SHOOTING

Agent has long history of violence

Officer should never have gotten badge, gun, relatives say

By Jack Brook, Michael R. Sisak, Amanda Swinhart and Claire Galofaro
ASSOCIATED PRESS

AUGUSTA, Maine — The Immigration and Customs Enforcement officer who shot a Colombian man in Maine this week is an Army veteran who has struggled with serious mental health issues since early childhood and never should have been given a badge and gun to patrol American streets, several of his close relatives told The Associated Press.

David Brouillette has a history of terrifying and violent behavior, according to those relatives. They accuse him of attacking women in his life over the years, and one shared a voicemail with the AP from last winter in which he told her that he thought someone should slit her throat.

Brouillette's troubling past further challenges how the Department of Homeland Security has vetted recruits as it went on a hiring spree to help carry out President Donald Trump's immigration crackdown.

At least 10 people have died in encounters with immigration agents since Trump launched the crackdown after retaking office, including Johan Sebastián Durán Guerrero, 25, a Colombian national who was shot and killed by Brouillette on Monday while in his car near his home in the coastal Maine city of Biddeford.

DHS, which hasn't released the name of the officer who killed Durán Guerrero, has said the "vehicle attempted to flee the scene and, fearing for public safety, an officer discharged his weapon."

Brouillette didn't respond to text messages or an email seeking comment. Three relatives

See ICE on Page A6

Dog walker Shrahan Raghuram takes Roo out in Chicago's Bucktown neighborhood on Friday. TERRENCE ANTONIO JAMES/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Smoky air is bad for health of Fido and friends, as well

By Finnegan Belleau
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Mike Russell regularly checks the weather before work. He's the co-owner of J&M Dog Walking, so weather plays an important role in deciding how much time his clients spend outdoors.

When Russell saw the advisory for poor air quality Thursday morning, he "didn't know what to expect," he said. Still, he told walkers to take dogs out quickly and to spend more time inside with them instead.

But Russell, 43, quickly realized the pollution was going to be a larger issue. Many of his North Side clients canceled their scheduled dog walks because they didn't want their pets to breathe the polluted air — or because they weren't going into work themselves, Russell said. That night he worried about comparisons in

See SMOKE on Page A2

DEADLY EFFECTS: Wildfire smoke, on rise in U.S. as climate warms, attacks nearly every system in the body. Nation & World, Page B5

Parasite leaving shoppers anxious

As cases surge, many Chicagoans rethink what's on their plates

By Lila Hempel-Edgers
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

It's been more than a week since Jackie Gonzalez ate the bag of prepackaged salad mix she suspects left her tied to the bathroom and doubled over with debilitating stomach pain.

As the infection leaves her system, the physical symptoms of the illness her doctor told her to assume was cyclosporiasis are fading. What's left is a growing anxiety that follows her to the grocery store and the dinner table.

Jackie Gonzalez stands outside the home she shares with her parents in Chicago's Rogers Park neighborhood on Tuesday. Gonzalez and her brother suspect they acquired a cyclosporiasis infection after eating a bagged salad mix from a grocery store. CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

"It's changed the way I'm eating and it's created fear," said Gonzalez, 25, who lives in Rogers Park. "I honestly didn't think it was going to happen to me, and when it did, it was such a painful experience to go through."

As cases of cyclosporiasis

See PARASITE on Page A2

LETTUCE BLAMED: Federal health officials have identified lettuce served by Taco Bell locations across five U.S. states as a source of the outbreak of diarrhea-causing parasite cyclospora. Business, Page B1

For Cubs, Sox, second half begins with high hopes

Both Chicago teams look at the looming trade deadline with sights set on postseason berths. For the first time in several years, the Sox could be a buyer. On the other hand, the Cubs' Jed Hoyer said Friday that the next two weeks will give the club a clearer idea of needs. Sports

SUBSCRIPTION

Visit myaccount.chicagotribune.com or call 312-546-7900 to sign up for a subscription. To place an ad, visit placeanad.chicagotribune.com.

WEATHER FORECAST

TODAY H: 89 L: 68
SUN. H: 82 L: 66
MON. H: 88 L: 72
Complete details on Page A8

INDEX

Almanac A6
Arts & Living B7
Comics B10-11
Crossword B11
Editorials A5
Horoscope B10
Nation & World B4
Sudoku B11
Television B9

179th year No. 199
© Chicago Tribune

