

“All the News
That’s Fit to Print”

The New York Times

THE WEATHER
Today, cloudy, showers and thunderstorms, humid, high 78. Tonight, cloudy, humid, thunderstorms, low 72. Tomorrow, mostly sunny, breezy, high 83. Weather map, Page A24.

VOL. CLXXV No. 60,949

© 2026 The New York Times Company

SATURDAY, JULY 18, 2026

Prices in Canada may be higher

$4.00

Alison Leschen, member of Cape Cod’s Old Ladies Against Underwater Garbage, standing in Lovells Pond near Barnstable, Mass.

BILLY HICKEY FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

Attacks Across Region Escalate War With Iran

This article is by Leily Nikounazar, Shirin Hakim and Lara Jakes.

Iran and the United States expanded their fighting over the past two nights, as the U.S. military struck bridges, rail lines and a maritime observation tower, according to videos and Iranian state media. Iran said it had retaliated by firing on other countries in the region that host U.S. military bases, and Kuwait said that power and water plants had been hit.

President Trump declared a cease-fire agreement with Iran “over” more than a week ago. Since then, U.S. and Iranian forces have carried out daily attacks, and Mr. Trump has threatened to destroy civilian infrastructure to try to force Iran to make a deal that would permanently end the war and prevent it from obtaining a nuclear weapon. Iranian officials have warned that they would retaliate by targeting civilian infrastructure in nearby countries.

Rail Lines, Power Plant and American Allies Reportedly Hit

Infrastructure that civilians rely on to survive, like water treatment plants, are generally not considered legitimate military targets, and striking them could be considered a war crime, legal scholars say. But strikes on railroads and bridges may well have a military purpose, if they transport troops or weapons.

U.S. Central Command, which oversees American forces in the Middle East, said in a statement on Friday that it had launched strikes on Iran for a seventh consecutive night. It did not describe the targets. Iranian state media reported explosions in Sirik, a port city that hosts Iranian naval bases and has been a target of past U.S. attacks.

In a statement on Thursday night, Central Command said an earlier round of strikes had “hit dozens of Iranian military targets such as coastal surveillance and air defense sites, military logistics infrastructure and maritime capabilities.” It did not directly address Iranian claims that bridges and railroads had been hit.

Continued on Page A7

Picking Trash Out of Muck, And Loving It

By CARA BUCKLEY

BARNSTABLE, Mass. — The pond looked pristine, reflecting the wispy clouds and languid blue of a summertime Cape Cod sky.

The women gathered at its edge were not fooled.

They had scouted the pond months earlier and knew what was held in its depths: Hundreds of old beer cans and wine bottles, cracked golf balls and cinder blocks, wooden pallets and long-forgotten giegaws.

The women had prepared for this moment. Trained for it. Passed a swim test. They set out into the water in life jackets and kayaks, snorkels and masks. Not one of them was a day younger than 65.

The trash never stood a chance. Over the course of the next hour, the Old Ladies Against Underwater Garbage hauled as much trash out of Lovells Pond in Barnstable as time and space allowed. They filled the storage compartments of their kayaks with it, strapped it onto gear loops, balanced it across bows. A fishing pole. Part of a white plastic lounge chair. A wooden pallet. A disintegrating car tire. After ferrying it all back to land, the women marveled at the haul.

“You’re exhausted, you’re maybe a little sunburned, you’re filthy, and it’s the best feeling,” said Lisa Weiss, a retired high school math teacher and, at 65, the baby of the group.

The Old Ladies Against Underwater Garbage was started in 2018 by Susan Baur, now 86, a retired psychologist who lives in North Falmouth. She’d been sal-

Continued on Page A18

President Trump speaking Thursday at the White House.

POOL PHOTO BY SAUL LOEB

In Britain, ‘King of the North’ Finds Way to 10 Downing St.

By MICHAEL D. SHEAR

LONDON — Andy Burnham, the man about to become Britain’s next prime minister, looked exhausted and on the edge of fury.

It was October 2020, the depths of the Covid-19 pandemic. As mayor of Greater Manchester, he had just learned from an aide that the Conservative government in London, some 200 miles south, had imposed fresh lockdown restrictions on his area, while refusing his demand for $87 million to protect low-income workers and struggling businesses.

“This is no way to run the country in a national crisis,” he fumed in front of a Manchester concert hall. “They should not be doing this. Grinding people down. Trying to accept the least they can get away with.”

“It is frankly disgraceful,” he said.

The video clip went viral, earned Mr. Burnham the nickname “King of the North” and was arguably the moment that set him hurtling toward No. 10 Downing Street.

On Friday, he became the leader of the Labour Party, and on Monday, King Charles III will formally ask him to become the country’s 59th prime minister.

Mr. Burnham’s brand has al-

Continued on Page A5

Andy Burnham, the Labour Party’s new leader, on Friday.

TOBY SHEPHEARD/A.F.P. — GETTY IMAGES

Outside the Escondido, Calif., home of Kerry Sheron, which neighbors called “the Trump house.”

MARK ABRAMSON FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

Tribute to Trump Becomes the Scene of a Killing

By CORINA KNOLL

ESCONDIDO, Calif. — The show of political preference cropped up outside a modest terra-cotta home a few years ago, a spectacle of American flags, banners and flowers in veneration of Donald J. Trump.

Residents of Escondido, Calif., could not miss the plethora of unfurled flags tethered to the home’s fence, some oversized and perched along its rail, their staffs rising high. Alongside them were placards with brazen declarations, such as “Open Border Welcomes Death and Destruction to America.”

A Man More Nuanced Than Décor Showed

Situated on Mission Avenue, a corridor of north San Diego County, the display had a daily audience within a sea of swift-moving traffic.

The longtime owners of the home were Kerry Sheron and his wife, Maria Garcia. During rush hour, they could be found outside waving and nodding to those who passed.

Most drivers hurtled on by, but those who engaged reflected a

Continued on Page A17

China’s A.I. Breakthrough Threatens U.S.’s Edge

By MEAGHAN TOBIN and CADE METZ

The contest between China and the United States for supremacy in artificial intelligence escalated on Friday when the Chinese start-up Moonshot AI released a new A.I. model that appeared to narrow the lead held by well-funded American competitors.

Moonshot said that the model, Kimi K3, was the world’s largest

Freely Available Model Championed by Xi

open-source A.I. system, allowing anyone to use, modify and build on it freely. The company said that Kimi K3 performed as well as leading models from OpenAI and Anthropic at some key tasks.

The release coincided with an address by Xi Jinping, China’s leader, in which he outlined an ambitious vision for global A.I. development that cast China as the champion of an open approach to the technology.

“A.I. development should not be a solo performance by a single country but a symphony of international cooperation,” Mr. Xi said. China was “ready to work with all parties to seize the opportunities

Continued on Page A9

NATIONAL A10-19

Flood Danger Remains

Waters that tore through Central Texas began to ebb, even as flash flood warnings blared in other areas.

PAGE A18

Grief and Anger in Houston

Mourning mixes with fear in an area conditioned by discrimination after an ICE agent killed a man.

PAGE A10

INTERNATIONAL A4-9

Internal Clash in Ukraine

The nation’s newly dismissed defense minister aired the most dramatic, public critique of the military command to emerge during the war.

PAGE A6

France Rethinks Firefighting

Forest fires mostly occurred in the country’s south until recently. As blazes now inch farther north, new strategies are being adopted.

PAGE A4

Journey From Jail to U.S.

In his first interview since being released by China, Pastor Ezra Jin Mingri details his surprise release after an appeal by President Trump.

PAGE A9

ARTS C1-6

Fellow Artist Turned Boss

Ted Huffman, an American director with a collaborative spirit (and once a boy soprano), has taken over the Aix-en-Provence Festival in France.

PAGE C1

He Ruled Honky-Tonk Music

Gary Stewart, a former country star, died in 2003, but new fans are rediscovering his songs.

PAGE C1

TRAVEL C7-9

Revolutionary Journeys

The legacy of a Cherokee woman who was labeled both a patriot and a traitor for the actions she took in 1776.

PAGE C8

BUSINESS B1-6

Boeing Tries to Turn a Corner

The company is seeing demand for its 737 Max, though orders for its new planes lag rival Airbus.

PAGE B1

Illness-Tied Produce Removed

Taylor Farms, a top producer of fresh vegetables, will remove products linked to a cyclosporiasis outbreak.

PAGE B1

SPORTS B7-10

It Takes a Small Army

Getting those giant flags onto the field at a World Cup match requires precise planning and a lot of helpers.

PAGE B7

Assessing a Coming Storm

At M.L.B.’s All-Star Game workout day, players discussed the future with a labor deal set to expire.

PAGE B9

OPINION A22-23

Linda Greenhouse

PAGE A23

