

Kennedy forces out vaccine advisers

Unprecedented move against CDC panel escalates policy overhaul

BY LENA H. SUN AND LAUREN WEBER

Health and Human Services Secretary Robert F. Kennedy Jr. said Monday he was removing the entire membership of the influential vaccine advisory panel that makes immunization recommendations for the United States, an unprecedented move by Kennedy and escalation of his overhaul of federal vaccination policy.

In an op-ed published in the Wall Street Journal, Kennedy said he decided to retire the 17 independent vaccine experts from the Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices because the panel has been “plagued with persistent conflicts of interest” and has become a “rubber stamp” for vaccines. Doctors and pharmacists look to the committee’s recommendations to decide which shots to offer.

Kennedy has long criticized the panel, which makes vaccine recommendations to the director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. When the recommendations are approved by the director, they become official public health guidance and are required to be covered by insurance plans at no cost to consumers.

The ouster of ACIP members marks the latest move by Kennedy that raised alarms among proponents of vaccines. He also forced out the Food and Drug Administration’s top vaccine scientist, hired a vaccine skeptic to scrutinize the panel’s work.

SEE PANEL ON A20

SLY STONE 1943-2025

Visionary musician defied definition

BY BRIAN MURPHY

Sly Stone, whose band Sly and the Family Stone electrified Woodstock audiences and introduced a genre-fusing brand of psychedelic funk with hits such as “Family Affair” and “Everyday People” but then mostly vanished from the music scene for decades in the grip of drug abuse, died June 9 at his home in Granada Hills, California. He was 82.

The cause was chronic obstructive pulmonary disease and other health-related complications, said his manager, Arlene Hirschowitz.

Mr. Stone’s musical adventurousism and ear for the times created an enduring soundtrack of the 1960s and early ’70s. The joyful “Hot Fun in the Summertime” in 1969 was a break from the era’s political storms; the boom-laka-laka-laka-laka mojo of “I Want to Take You Higher” that same year uncorked pure energy. The song had the Woodstock throng dancing at 4 a.m. on Aug. 17, 1969, with Mr. Stone jamming on keyboards and roaming the stage in a white jumpsuit with fringe flying and his Afro haloed by the lights.

“I sang, ‘I want to take you higher,’ and they sang back the last word, ‘higher.’ All of them. Damn. We kept it going. I kept it

SEE STONE ON A20

Pentagon orders 700 Marines to L.A.

DANIEL COLE/REUTERS

Law enforcement officers stand guard outside the Metropolitan Detention Center as protests of immigration raids continue Monday.

Newsom says threat to arrest him is ‘authoritarian’ step

BY MAEVE RESTON AND MATT VISER

LOS ANGELES — The relationship between the leader of the United States and the country’s most populous state reached a near-breaking point Monday, as President Donald Trump said that he thought California Gov. Gavin Newsom should be arrested, a claim that Newsom described as an unmistakable step toward authoritarianism.

The back-and-forth came as Trump stepped up the military’s presence on the streets of Los Angeles, against Newsom’s will, as the two men traded recriminations.

Trump repeatedly ridiculed Newsom, a Democrat, saying that he is “grossly incompetent” and had done “a terrible job.” Asked about a threat made by his border czar Tom Homan to arrest the governor, Trump said, “I would do it if I were Tom.”

“I think it’s great,” Trump added, without specifying any alleged criminal wrongdoing or charges. “Gavin likes the publicity, but I think it would be a great thing.”

“That’s an American president in 2025, threatening a political opponent who happens to be a sitting governor,” Newsom said in an interview Monday. “That’s not with precedent in modern times. That’s what we see around the globe in authoritarian regimes.”

Newsom’s comments reflected a broader frustration for Democratic leaders, who have been unable to counter what they see as an escalation of Trump’s anti-democratic actions in his emboldened second term.

Newsom has tried all methods: He was a face of the resistance in

SEE NEWSOM ON A4

Seizing emergency powers is key to Trump’s governing

BY NAFTALI BENDAVID

The specter of federally controlled troops in American streets has historically signaled a seismic social crisis, from forcing integration in Arkansas to protecting civil rights marchers in Alabama. But President Donald Trump sent the National Guard to Los Angeles at a time when state and local officials said they had protests there under control.

The move reflects an increasingly evident pattern of his presidency: Trump declares an emergency or crisis where many others do not see one, enabling him to take sweeping actions, rally supporters and fight on political terrain he finds favorable.

Trump’s declaration of an economic emergency in April enabled sweeping tariffs. His declaration of an invasion on the southern border paved the way for intensified deportations. An energy emergency made it easier for him to ease regulations. His pronouncement that fentanyl entering from Canada was an emergency justified sanctions, as did a similar finding on the International Criminal Court’s approach to Israel.

By many measures, the emergencies were hard to discern. But Trump’s ability to pronounce them via executive order enabled him to instantly deploy the resulting authority.

“It gives him extraordinary powers to not go through the normal machinery and bureaucracy of government,” said Mike Madrid, a longtime Republican strategist who has been critical of Trump. “The goal is to wield extraordinary powers to get rid of government where he wants, get rid of the bureaucracy where he

SEE TRUMP ON A7

TRUMP ACTIVATES MORE GUARD UNITS

State, local officials decry summons as incendiary

BY LINDSEY UNDERWOOD, REIS THEBAULT, MOLLY HENNESSY-FISKE AND DANIELLE PAQUETTE

LOS ANGELES — The Pentagon on Monday ordered a battalion of 700 Marines to Los Angeles and mobilized an additional 2,000 National Guard troops as protests of the Trump administration’s immigration policies spilled into a fourth day, escalating a confrontation between the White House and the country’s most populous state.

The Marines, summoned from an infantry unit typically trained for overseas warfare, will assist more than 300 National Guard members that President Donald Trump deployed to the city over the weekend, the first wave of roughly 2,100 activated so far for the mission, according to the Defense Department. The deployments follow demonstrations against immigration raids that at times turned violent.

The additional National Guard troops and Marines announced Monday push the number of military personnel designated for duty in Los Angeles to approximately 4,700 — a rapid, stunning escalation by the Trump administration.

The Marines, stationed east of Los Angeles in Twenty-nine Palms, had started moving out Monday afternoon, a defense official said, speaking on the condition of anonymity to discuss ongoing operations.

This marks the first time in six decades an American president has ordered such a military intervention without the approval of a state’s governor.

State and local officials in California — a frequent target of Trump’s ire — denounced the deployments as incendiary.

“This is unprecedented that the president is using the military against his own people in this way,” said Los Angeles City Council member Hugo Soto-Martinez, whose district adjacent to downtown encompasses a range of immigrant communities.

Most protests have been peaceful, state and local officials have said, even as they spread to cities

SEE PROTESTS ON A4

‘He’s waging a war’: Angelenos react to Trump’s crackdown. A6

EMPTY DESKS

How the District’s failure to curb truancy in middle schools fueled the biggest youth crime surge in a generation

BY ROBERT SAMUELS, LAUREN LUMPKIN AND JOHN D. HARDEN

As the first bell rang at Brookland Middle School on April 3, 2024, Irving LaBoard’s desk sat empty. An hour earlier, police had found his body in Fort Dupont Park. He had been shot and killed.

Irving was 14, an eighth-grader. Growing up, he was a strong reader who loved tossing footballs, playing the piano and analyzing the deeper meaning of Marvel movies. But in the last year of his life, Irving was detained in Maryland after being accused of stealing cars, then arrested and charged in the District with theft and unauthorized use of a vehicle.

Weeks before his death, Nadinée Younger, Irving’s great-aunt, had been looking for any clue that could help explain what had gone wrong with him. She found a letter from his middle school, dated Feb. 1, that said Irving had missed 47 days of class — half the school year.

“How can you miss all those days?” she recalled thinking.

Irving was one of nearly 16,000 D.C. Public Schools students — one-third of its K-12 enrollment — who were truant that school year, meaning they missed at least two weeks of classes without an excuse. For more than a decade, District leaders have linked school attendance to youth crime, saying tackling one will curb the other.

But a Washington Post investigation found that the D.C. Council and Mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D) have failed to follow through on key initiatives that promised to keep students in class and out

SEE TRUANCY ON A12

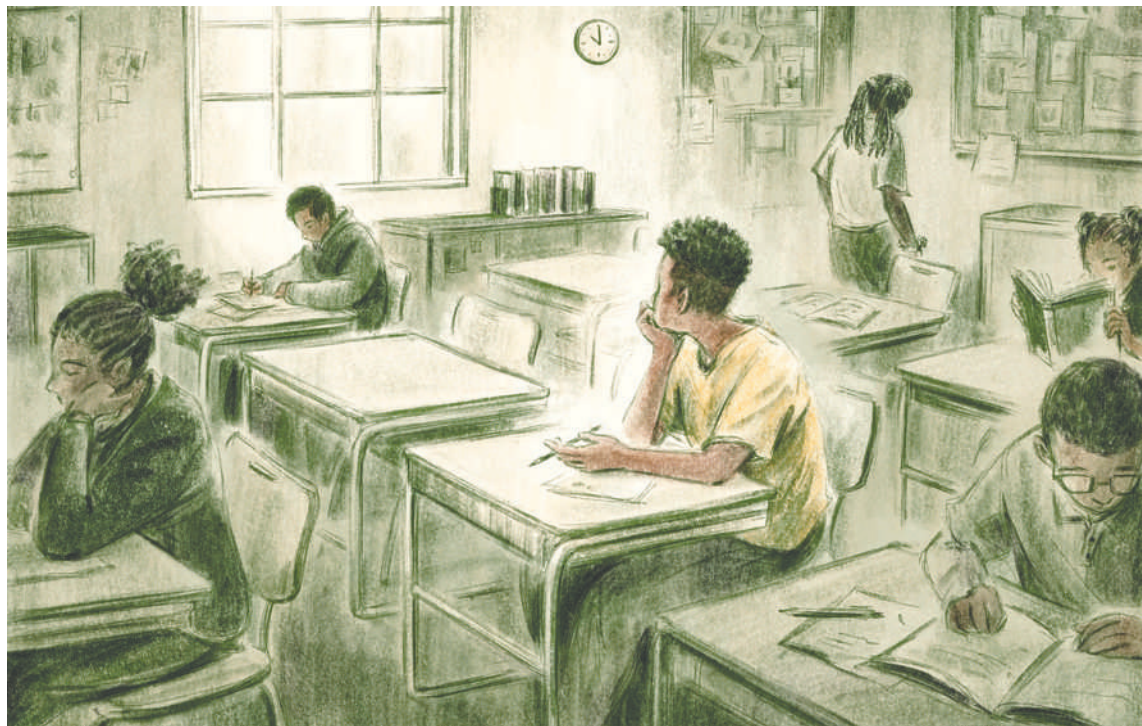

ILLUSTRATION BY SALLY DENG/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Do kids feel safe in D.C.?

We asked nearly two dozen middle-schoolers to explain, in their words, what it’s like to grow up in the city. A10-11

IN THE NEWS

A vulnerable spot A public feud has laid bare how much Elon Musk may lose if his relationship with the president unravels. A16

Day trippers A group of friends raced to hit every Metro station in one day. Would they make it? B1

THE NATION Democrats accused Tulsi Gabbard of breaking the law with her personnel moves. A2
Economists warned the Trump tax bill is likely to worsen the U.S. debt load and inflation. A3

THE WORLD A boat carrying aid for Gaza that was seized by Israeli forces arrived at Ashdod. A8
Russia launched a major drone attack on Ukraine; both sides began a prisoner swap. A9

THE ECONOMY Warner Bros. Discovery will split into two companies, ending a bid to create an all-in-one TV, film and streaming behemoth. A15
More than a dozen states are suing the administration to prevent the use of rapid-fire devices for guns. A16

THE REGION D.C.’s mayor said she regrets opening Dupont Circle Park for WorldPride after Saturday’s stabbings. B1
An Army ranger’s trial is an early test for a special trial counsel that aims to more transparently prosecute military crimes. B1

STYLE Performances from Tony winner Nicole Scherzinger and Lin-Manuel Miranda were among the highlights of the awards show. C1

HEALTH & SCIENCE Dating apps can affect mental health. Keep these things in mind to cope effectively. E1

BUSINESS NEWS.....A15
COMICS.....C5
OBITUARIES.....B4
OPINION PAGES.....A17
TELEVISION.....C4
WORLD NEWS.....A8

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post
Year 148, No. 54243

