

A moment of greatness as Ovechkin ties Gretzky

Barry Svrluga

When it happened — when Alex Ovechkin buried still another puck in a career littered with buried pucks — he thrust his arms to the Capital One Arena rafters, where his No. 8 will someday reside. His teammates, all of them, spilled onto the ice. The group hug played out in the corner, along the boards, joy in red sweaters. It was as if the 18,573 who jammed the building were in on the embrace.

When Ovechkin emerged from the throng, he skated first to his son Sergei, seated along the glass. Next stop: center ice, where he looked up into the box of Capitals owner Ted Leonsis.

Ovechkin pointed, then waved, then bowed — the salute to Wayne Gretzky.

“I’m still like a little shaking,” Ovechkin said long afterward, wearing gym shorts and flip-flops, after he cracked open a beer before a postgame news conference in which he shared the stage with Gretzky. “Still like can’t believe it. ... How I said, it’s history.”

This is hockey history. Heck, it’s sports history. Ovechkin’s two goals Friday night in a 5-3 victory over the Chicago Blackhawks were the 893rd and 894th of his

SEE SVRLUGA ON A7

HANNAH FOSLIEN/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST
Alex Ovechkin waves to Wayne Gretzky after his 894th goal.

Two for the show: Ovechkin’s two goals match Gretzky, fuel a win. D1

Stocks dive as China strikes back on tariffs

34% FEE ON U.S. GOODS PRESAGES MORE PAIN

Fed chair warns of higher costs and slower growth

This article is by Christian Shepherd, Aaron Gregg, Lily Kuo, Rebecca Tan and Rachel Siegel

Stock markets slid again Friday as China matched new U.S. tariffs, deepening the trade war President Donald Trump kicked off this week and signaling more global economic turmoil ahead.

Beijing announced an additional 34 percent tariff on U.S. goods, the same rate Trump had imposed on Chinese imports Wednesday — a move that Chinese officials called “inconsistent with international trade rules.”

The development brought more pain on Wall Street, where major indexes have all dropped more than 9 percent since Trump unveiled the sweeping tariffs

Wednesday. On Friday, the S&P 500 closed down nearly 6 percent and the Dow Jones Industrial Average shed 5.5 percent. The tech-heavy Nasdaq was off 5.8 percent — firmly in bear market territory, or down more than 20 percent from its recent peak.

The swirl of events led analysts at JPMorgan to increase their estimated odds of a recession to 60 percent, up significantly from previous projections. In a note Friday, researchers also wrote that “the recession in economic

SEE MARKETS ON A5

Inside look: Behind Trump’s decision to upend global trade. A4

India: Nation debates its response to painful economic blow. A7

U.S. abandons 80 years of globalization policies

Trump gambles that his new system will top an era that brought wealth but left behind many workers

BY DAVID J. LYNCH

The tariff barrage that President Donald Trump unleashed this week on the world economy marks a decisive end to an era of freewheeling globalization that was shaped by American policymakers, business executives and consumers.

The United States is now abandoning the system that made it rich and powerful, gambling that it can become more prosperous by waging a global trade war on friend and foe alike.

Trump’s new protectionism breaks with international economic policies that were pursued by more than a dozen American presidents as the nation grew into a superpower that boasted a $30 trillion economy, the world’s largest and most innovative.

“This is a historical moment. Even if there is padding back by the administration and even if negotiations start to soften the edges, this is the nail in the coffin of globalization,” said Carmen Reinhart, a former chief economist of the World Bank and now a professor at Harvard University’s John F. Kennedy School of Government.

From the end of World War II until Trump’s 2016 election, U.S. leaders led a global effort to lower barriers to trade, investment and finance. Spreading prosperity to distant lands was

SEE ERA ON A5

THEODORE MCCARRICK
1930-2025

Ex-cardinal defrocked and disgraced in abuse scandal

BY BART BARNES
AND ADAM BERNSTEIN

Theodore E. McCarrick, the former cardinal and spiritual leader of the Catholic Archdiocese of Washington who, more than a decade into retirement, was expelled from the priesthood after the church found him guilty of sexual abuse — a precipitous and historic fall for a globe-trotting Vatican emissary who was once one of the church’s most admired public figures — has died at 94.

Cardinal Robert W. McElroy, archbishop of Washington, confirmed the death in a statement but did not provide further details. In recent years, Mr. McCarrick had been living in Dittmer, Missouri. According to the Vatican, he died on April 3.

Raised by a widowed mother

SEE MCCARRICK ON A16

Incentivized to bet — no matter the cost

As online sportsbooks boom, aggressive ‘loyalty’ programs face growing pushback

BY RICK MAESE AND ALBERT SAMAHA

Two nights before the Super Bowl in New Orleans, DraftKings hosted an invite-only party at Brennan’s. The Chainsmokers and Nelly performed as celebrities including Shannon Sharpe, Flavor Flav and Keegan-Michael Key worked the room.

Also in attendance at the famed French Quarter haunt that night: hundreds of indistinguishable sports fans who had earned their way in by virtue of their status with the sports betting company. They were DraftKings’ “VIPs.”

To encourage their best customers to keep betting, many of the sportsbooks legally operating in the United States — 30 or so companies fiercely battling for millions of providers — assign “hosts” to provide these VIPs with one-on-one customer service, lavishing them with trips, event tickets and promotional offers. It’s no different from loyalty programs found across a variety of businesses, sportsbooks say, including brick-and-mortar casinos.

“We reward our players for their loyalty,” said Shawn Henley, chief customer officer for DraftKings. “And, you know, the more loyal or the more engaged you are with the platform, the more opportunities and the more benefits that you receive.”

But addiction experts, some lawmakers and many gamblers say the programs aren’t designed to reward bettors. Instead, they say, they’re designed to entice them to bet bigger and more often, even driving some susceptible gamblers to the brink of financial ruin. Lawsuits are piling up, accusing VIP programs of enabling addiction. Two Democrats recently introduced federal legislation seeking to ban the

SEE BETTING ON A8

ILLUSTRATION BY MICHAEL DOMINE/THE WASHINGTON POST

Judge orders return of man sent to prison in El Salvador

BY KATIE METTLER,
MARIA SACCHETTI
AND DANA MUNRO

A federal judge on Friday ordered the Trump administration to secure the release of a man wrongly deported to a mega-prison in El Salvador last month and return him to the United States after his lawyers argued he was at imminent risk of death in that country.

U.S. District Judge Paula Xinis in Maryland directed the administration to arrange the return of Kilmar Abrego García, a Salvadoran immigrant married to a U.S. citizen, by no later than 11:59 p.m. on Monday. As the judge issued her order from the bench, his supporters outside the courtroom cheered.

The Trump administration immediately appealed the ruling Friday. Officials have argued that they have no power to return Abrego García because he is in the

SEE DEPORTATION ON A11

IN THE NEWS

Left in the lurch International teachers are scrambling after D.C. Public Schools ended a program that would sponsor them for permanent residency in the United States. B1

Elena Delle Donne The two-time WNBA most valuable player who led the Mystics to the 2019 title announced her retirement. D2

THE NATION
The Supreme Court allowed Trump officials to freeze millions in teacher training grants. A2
CDC layoffs are hindering lifesaving programs amid an effort to focus on infectious diseases. A3

THE WORLD
Israel struck Syria this week amid a clash of Israeli and Turkish interests there. A10
South Korea’s Constitutional Court voted to remove its president from office. A11

THE ECONOMY
The labor market added 228,000 jobs in March, a better-than-expected performance amid concerns of a weakening economy. A12
The White House was close to announcing a proposal to spin off TikTok when tariffs on China derailed the plan. A12

THE REGION
A man who police said stabbed himself and six other people at a Northeast Washington intersection faces multiple assault charges. B1
Ed Martin, the interim D.C. U.S. attorney, has boosted far-right politicians in Europe, disclosure forms show. B1

STYLE
Newsmax, the conservative cable network, saw its shares skyrocket after it began trading on the New York Stock Exchange. C1
SPORTS
Cooper Flagg isn’t your typical Duke hoops star. The freshman might actually be better. D1

BUSINESS NEWS.....A12
COMICS.....C5
OBITUARIES.....B4
OPINION PAGES.....A14
TELEVISION.....C4
WORLD NEWS.....A10

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post
Year 148, No. 54177

