

Chicago Tribune

QUESTIONS? CALL 1-800-TRIBUNE

SATURDAY, APRIL 5, 2025

BREAKING NEWS AT CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

Stocks tumble for second day

TRUMP'S TARIFFS TRIGGER QUESTIONS: How soon will prices rise? And what is the limit of a president's power to implement tariffs? The Associated Press takes a look at some key questions looming over Trump's 10% baseline tax on imports from all countries and higher tariff rates on dozens of nations. Nation & World in Business, Page 5

Markets' worst crisis since pandemic deepens as China plans 34% tax in retort to Trump's tariffs

By Stan Choe
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Two days after sending the economy reeling by announcing widespread tariffs, President Donald Trump insisted his trade policies will never change even as the sell-off for financial markets worldwide slammed into a higher gear on Friday. The S&P 500 tumbled 6% as Wall Street's worst crisis since the COVID-19 crash deepened, after China matched Trump's big raise in tariffs announced earlier this week. The move increases the stakes in a trade war that could end with a recession that hurts everyone.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average plunged 2,231 points, or 5.5%, and the Nasdaq composite tumbled 5.8% to pull more than 20% below its record set in December. European stocks dropped roughly 5%. The price of crude oil tumbled to its lowest level since 2021. China's response to U.S. tariffs caused an immediate acceleration of losses in markets worldwide. The Commerce Ministry in Beijing said it would respond to the 34% tariffs imposed by the U.S. on imports from China with its own 34% tariff on imports of all U.S. products beginning April 10. Trump seemed unfazed. He woke up Friday at Mar-a-Lago, his private club in Palm Beach, and headed to his nearby golf course a few miles away after writing on social media that "THIS IS A GREAT TIME TO GET RICH."

Turn to Stocks, Page 6

Venezuelan migrant brothers José Gregorio González, left, and Alfredo Pacheco are reunited in Broadview after González was released Friday from ICE custody to donate a kidney to his brother. Pacheco was diagnosed with kidney failure earlier this year. ANTONIO PEREZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

'He will get to save my life'

Venezuelan migrant temporarily released from ICE facility to donate kidney to dying brother

By Laura Rodríguez Presa
Chicago Tribune

A dying Venezuelan man was reunited with his brother Friday morning in an emotional reunion outside a restaurant near the ICE processing center in Broadview that federal authorities released him from so he could donate a kidney to save his brother's life. Alfredo Pacheco, 37, of Cicero, is facing terminal renal failure. On Wednesday, ICE agreed to release José Gregorio González, 43, to undergo the transplant, giving the siblings and those who support them much hope and relief. "I'm extremely happy, it's a blessing," Pacheco told the Friday. Last month, the Tribune was the first to report that González had been arrested by the Immigration and Customs authorities and was awaiting deportation. Elected officials, including Sen. Tammy Duckworth, Sen. Dick Durbin and U.S. Rep. Jesús "Chuy" García, rallied in support of the Venezuelan brothers, with more than 1,700 people signing a petition requesting that ICE release González. Pacheco said he received a call from his brother a little after 9 a.m. Friday letting him know he'd been dropped off. Pacheco rushed to meet him, where he was waiting on the side of a road wearing a brown hat and a light sweater.

When they saw each other, they embraced and Pacheco kissed his brother's cheek and caressed his face. It had been a monthlong fight to get him released. According to authorities, González will be released for a one-year stay of removal under check-ins with immigration officials. He will be eligible for employment authorization. As early as next week, the brothers will begin the process of the kidney transplant.

Turn to Kidney, Page 4

Policy dodges felony review

Pilot program allows police to directly file some gun charges

By Madeline Buckley
Chicago Tribune

The Cook County state's attorney's office announced Friday that it is expanding a pilot program allowing Chicago police officers to bypass prosecutors and directly file charges in some low-level felony gun cases, a move the office says will ease backlogs and free up police officers and assistant state's attorneys for higher-priority work. The office launched the effort in January in the department's Englewood District on the South Side, where police officers through Wednesday initiated charges in 43 gun possession cases. The program will now begin in the Far South Side's Calumet District while the office reviews data with an eye on expanding the program, officials said. The initiative will likely bring some relief to prosecutors in the office's Felony Review Unit, which is staffed at all hours by assistant state's attorneys who work with police to evaluate whether charges are appropriate. The announcement was quickly criticized by the Cook County public defender's

Turn to Charges, Page 4

INSIDE

ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

A reason to celebrate on opening day

Fans cheer after the Cubs defeated the Padres 3-1 in their home opener at Wrigley Field on Friday. Columnist Paul Sullivan says Cubs President Jed Hoyer may be entering a playoff-or-bust season after failing to take the team to the postseason in his first four years in charge, and his fate might rest on the bat of Kyle Tucker. Chicago Sports

SCHOOLS FUNDING: Mayor Brandon Johnson promised Friday to go to court if President Donald Trump follows through on a threat to revoke federal funding from school districts. Chicagoland, Page 2

One way to crack high egg prices

Interest in backyard chickens on the rise

By Joseph States and Richard Requena
Chicago Tribune

As Chicago-area shoppers hesitate to reach into grocery coolers when they see the price of eggs, Jim Irwin enjoys going out to his backyard chicken coop on Chicago's Northwest Side, and Annie Lawson gathers freshly laid eggs in her Grayslake yard. Winfield resident Sheena Tovt wishes she were so fortunate. In west suburban Winfield, residents are banned from raising livestock. Amid soaring egg prices, however, the town held an advisory referendum April 1 on whether the village should rethink its policy on backyard chickens. The non-binding measure to allow chickens lost by just 51 votes, according to unofficial results. Village President Carl Sorgatz said Winfield put the question on the ballot because the issue has inspired a lot of passionate debate in town. Despite the pro-poultry contin-gent's loss, Sorgatz said the Village Board still may reconsider the current ban. "We'll take a look at it in future board meetings to see whether the board might be willing to move forward in terms of changing the position we have," he said. That should be welcome news for Tovt, who has been pushing for backyard chickens in her community. The current egg

Jim Irwin lets out his chickens from their coop in Chicago's Albany Park neighborhood on March 17. EILEEN T. MESLAR/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Turn to Chickens, Page 2

