

WSJ

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL WEEKEND

DOW JONES | News Corp. *****

SATURDAY/SUNDAY, APRIL 5 - 6, 2025 ~ VOL. CCLXXXV NO. 79

WSJ.com ★★★★★ $6.00

What's News

Business & Finance

- ◆ The Dow plunged 2,200 points, or 5.5%, and the S&P 500 fell nearly 6% to close Wall Street's worst week since 2020, as Trump's trade war escalated, with China declaring it would impose sweeping tariffs on all U.S. goods. The Nasdaq entered bear market territory with its decline of 5.8%. A1, A7
- ◆ Fed Chairman Powell said the U.S. economy was likely to face a period of higher prices and weaker growth because of tariff hikes. A6
- ◆ Ticketing marketplace StubHub and fintech company Klarna are postponing IPO roadshows. A6
- ◆ Employers added jobs in March at a much stronger pace than expected, a sign that the labor market remained strong despite economic uncertainty, government layoffs and market turbulence. A1
- ◆ Trump is giving more time for investors to attempt to pull off a deal to operate TikTok in the U.S. A2
- ◆ Spanish bank Santander said it expected to report growth for the first quarter of 2025 and confirmed its guidance for the year. B9
- ◆ Helge Lund is to step down as chairman of BP as the energy giant slashes green spending and pivots back to oil amid pressure from investors. B10

World-Wide

- ◆ The top vaccine regulator ousted by RFK Jr. said the health secretary's team has sought nonexistent data to justify antivaccine narratives and pushed to water down regulation of unproven stem-cell treatments. A3
- ◆ A federal judge ordered the Trump administration to return a man immigration officials say they deported to an El Salvador prison in error, back to the U.S. A2
- ◆ The Trump administration said Medicare and Medicaid won't expand coverage of popular anti-obesity drugs, rejecting a proposal issued late last year by the Biden administration. A3
- ◆ Senate Republicans are plowing ahead with their plans for tax-cut extensions and new breaks. A7
- ◆ Secretary of State Rubio said he told a top Kremlin envoy that Russia needs to clarify whether it is committed to peace in Ukraine. A10
- ◆ A Russian ballistic missile strike on a Ukrainian city killed at least 14 people, including six children, Ukrainian officials said. A10
- ◆ Trump is pressing for access to mineral rights across the globe, hoping to outduel China in a global competition for raw materials. A10
- ◆ The U.S. is pushing to hold direct nuclear talks with Iran, U.S. officials say. A10

NOONAN

Canada, our friend, deserves better than this A17

CONTENTS	Obituaries..... C6
Business & Finance B9/10	Opinion..... A15-17
Design & Decor D6-7	Sports..... A14
Food..... D8-9	Style & Fashion D2-4
Heard on Street..... B11	Travel..... D10
Market Data..... B7	U.S. News..... A2-7
Market Digest..... B6	World News..... A10-12

© 2025 Dow Jones & Company, Inc. All Rights Reserved

Market Carnage Worsens

Dow plunges 2,200, Nasdaq enters bear territory after China counters U.S. tariffs

The Dow Jones Industrial Average plunged 2,200 points and the S&P 500 fell nearly 6% on Friday to close Wall Street's worst week since 2020, as President Trump's trade war escalated, with China declaring it would impose sweeping tariffs on all U.S. goods.

By Vicky Ge Huang, Krystal Hur and Gunjan Banerji

The Nasdaq Composite Index entered bear market territory on Friday with its decline of 5.8%, denoting a 20% drop from its peak. The carnage in the broad S&P was widespread, with 14 S&P 500 stocks rising for the day and 28 dropping 10% or more. The marketwide toll from the two-day tariff rout was a record $6.6 trillion. Friday's declines in all the major U.S. indexes sent the market to its worst week since the Covid-19 crisis was in full bloom, and it raised anxiety among traders that the com-

Please turn to page A6

◆ More coverage on tariffs and reaction A4, A6, A7

Index performance this past week

Trump Heads to Golf Club Amid Tariff Turmoil

PLAYING THROUGH: President Trump waved Friday as he arrived at the Trump International Golf Club in West Palm Beach, Fla. A Wall Street Journal poll found Americans souring on his economic plans, even before the latest levies were announced. A4

How Musk's Blitzkrieg of Cuts Fueled GOP Worries of a Political Liability

WASHINGTON—In the end, all it took to oust Postmaster General Louis DeJoy, whom President Trump appointed in his first term, was a nudge from Elon Musk.

By Josh Dawsey, Annie Linskey, Brian Schwartz and Dana Mattioli

During a Friday meeting last month at Trump's Bedminster, N.J., club, Musk complained to the president that DeJoy was resisting his cost-cutting efforts at the U.S. Postal Service, according to people briefed on the conversation.

Trump had grown annoyed with DeJoy already and wanted the postal service private and profitable, so he planned to fire him the following week, the people said. By Monday, DeJoy announced his resignation, effective immediately.

In the months since Trump took office, Musk has alienated some Trump aides with his chaotic approach to his role and worried Republicans concerned that his unpopularity could cost them future elections as it did in Wisconsin this week.

Through it all, Musk has retained his status as among the most influential advisers in Trump's White House—producing shock-and-awe, for a shock-and-awe president—and using his unpaid perch to reshape the federal bureaucracy, punish critics and serve as a key interlocutor to Trump.

Aides expect Musk to leave his formal White House post after his short-term assignment ends. Trump himself said recently that Musk, who heads electric-vehicle maker Tesla and SpaceX, had to eventually return to his companies. He is expected to remain an informal adviser to Trump, White House officials said.

Trump staffers, worried about how Musk could become a political albatross, highlighted to Trump the extent to which the Wisconsin Supreme Court

Please turn to page A4

March Hiring Topped Forecasts

By HARRIET TORRY

Employers added jobs in March at a much stronger pace than expected, a sign that the labor market remained strong despite economic uncertainty, government layoffs and market turbulence.

The U.S. added 228,000 jobs last month, the Labor Department reported Friday, well above the gain of 140,000 jobs that economists polled by The Wall Street Journal had expected to see.

That was also well above the average monthly gain of 158,000 over the prior 12 months. However, job gains for January and February were revised lower. The U.S. added 117,000 jobs in February.

Services-sector hiring picked up in March after a period of winter weakness in industries like leisure and hospitality. Healthcare added 54,000 jobs, including at hospitals and nursing facilities. The transportation sector also had strong growth, adding jobs for couriers and messengers and in truck transportation.

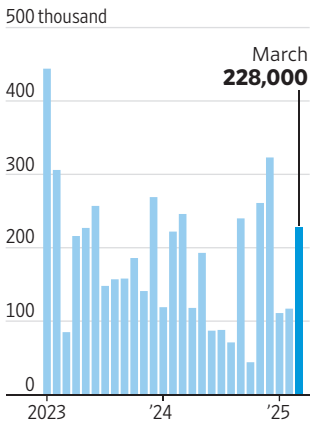

Economists said that while the strong report offers some relief about the state of the U.S. labor market last month, that is likely to be upended by the new tariff uncertainty.

"The primary takeaway for the March jobs report is that it represents the calm before the storm," said Joseph Brusuelas, chief economist at RSM, adding "the new tariff regime is going to damp hiring and send unemployment higher in the coming months."

The report failed to halt the continued market selloff Friday. Stocks kept falling sharply, after plunging on Thursday. The Trump administration announced sweeping new tariffs on countries around the world late Wednesday.

The unemployment rate, Please turn to page A6

Nonfarm payrolls, change from a month earlier

INSIDE

EXCHANGE
Republicans hated Larry Fink until he delivered the Panama Canal. B1

R1-R12

Lengthy Tasting Menus Give Diners Indigestion

By AMBER GIBSON

The 14-course tasting menu at Michelin-starred Reverie in Washington, D.C., is known for pristinely plated Atlantic seafood. At $245, the egg yolk sauce on the risotto tastes like liquid gold and dessert comes dotted with dollops of caviar.

None of this mattered on Wednesdays and Thursdays when owner Johnny Spero was having trouble filling tables. So he did what many chefs would find unthinkable: He slashed the menu by four courses midweek and dropped the price to $180.

It worked. Spero immediately saw a more crowded restaurant. "The goal is to give guests flexibility without compromising the quality of service," he said.

Across the U.S. and internationally, fine dining is changing its approach to tasting menus. Gone are the days of 18-course menus unfurling like a three-act opera over three-plus hours.

Now you can find three- and four-course prix-fixe menus for less than $200. Some restaurants have even dismantled their tasting menus and are allowing diners to order a la carte.

Chefs said they are facing struggles bringing in diners, rising food costs and worries about a looming recession. Diners are looking to spend less, or at least have the option to. Diners have also said that they don't want to be

Please turn to page A2

Fans of 'Glengarry Glen Ross' Discover an Inconvenient Truth

Play confounds viewers who were geared up for rant; 'I was on the edge of my seat'

By JOHN JURGENSEN

Nick Van Sistine, a 37-year-old salesman from Driftwood, Texas, speaks a common language with anyone in his line of work. They all quote the same "Glengarry Glen Ross" scene. "It's scripture," he said.

In the 1992 movie, an ace salesman tears into a group of demoralized real-estate pushers with insults and credos intended to motivate.

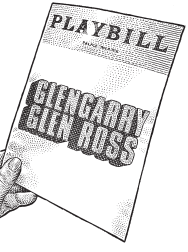

"A-B-C...always be closing." "Get them to sign on the line which is dotted."

"The leads are weak?... You're weak!"

So when Van Sistine visited New York last month to meet with clients, he was pumped to catch a live rendition of "Glengarry" on Broadway and hear those famous lines.

"I was on the edge of my seat," Van Sistine said later, "waiting for that

Please turn to page A2

No closure