

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

TUESDAY, MARCH 18, 2025

Doctor's care or friend's aid? Case pushes ethics barrier.

Cancer specialist's link with Dana-Farber VIP questioned after death

By Liz Kowalczyk
GLOBE STAFF

Day or night, Marc Cohen, a major donor to Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, had a direct line to one of its leading oncologists. No question was too big or too small, and almost no hour was off limits for a consultation.

Cohen and Dr. Kenneth C. Anderson exchanged hundreds of emails and texts over two decades about Cohen's disease, multiple myeloma, a rare and incurable blood cancer that is Anderson's specialty. It was no problem for the physician to pause a Sunday morning walk with his wife to weigh in on test results, respond to a 5:50 a.m. email on a Saturday to suggest medication for insomnia-inducing leg pain or jump on the phone at short notice.

'A patient-physician relationship exists when a physician serves a patient's medical needs.'

AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION CODE OF ETHICS

So after Cohen died in 2022 of complications from COVID-19 at a hospital near his suburban Washington, D.C., home, it came as a shock to his brother when, he said, a lawyer for Dana-Farber claimed Anderson was not Cohen's doctor and never had been. Rather, he offered advice out of friendship.

As a result, Dana-Farber said it did not have any medical records of Anderson's cancer care to share with Cohen's family, records that could shed light on treatment he received in his final days.

Now Cohen's brother has filed a complaint against the esteemed oncologist with the Massachusetts Board of Registration in Medicine, contending that Anderson's failure to keep medical records violated state regulations and ethical standards for physicians. Medical records are crucial for safe patient care be-

DANA-FARBER, Page A10

Israel resumed fighting in Gaza with airstrikes that killed dozens of people Tuesday morning, imperiling its cease-fire deal with Hamas. A3.

New Bedford's mayor is pushing back on the Globe Spotlight series on police abuses and is seeking an FBI review. B1.

Harvard won't charge tuition to families with incomes under $200,000 beginning in the 2025-2026 academic year, the university announced on Monday. D1.

Cuts by Elon Musk's DOGE effort could destabilize Social Security, many current and former officials fear. A4.

Sunny sails

Tuesday: Clouds giving way to sun. High 49-54, low 35-40.
Wednesday: Sunshine with some clouds. High 47-52, low 36-41.
Sunrise: 6:51. Sunset: 6:54.
Obituaries, C9.
Comics and Weather, D5-6.

VOL. 307, NO. 77

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

0 947725 4

Deportation tussle roils court

Justice Dept. lawyer sidesteps questions on whether Trump ignored judge's order

By Alan Feuer
and Zolan Kanno-Youngs
NEW YORK TIMES

The Trump administration on Monday stonewalled a federal judge seeking answers about whether the government had violated his order by deporting more than 200 people over the weekend, including those officials identified as members of a Venezuelan criminal gang.

The hearing in US District Court in Washington escalated a conflict between the White House and the courts that threatened to become a constitutional crisis.

A Justice Department lawyer refused to answer any detailed questions about the deportation flights to El Salvador, arguing that President Trump had broad authority to remove immigrants from the United States with little to no due process under an obscure wartime law known as the Alien Enemies Act of 1798.

The tense back-and-forth in court between the judge, James Boasberg, and Justice Department lawyer Abhishek Kampli left open the possibility of further conflict down the road. Boasberg directed Kampli to certify in writing by noon Tuesday — under seal if needed — that no immigrants were removed after his written order went into effect, a piece of information that will be crucial as the judge seeks to determine whether the Trump administration flouted his authority. The legal battle over removal of the immigrants was the latest — and perhaps most serious — flashpoint yet between federal courts, which have sought to curb many of Trump's recent executive actions, and an administration that has repeatedly

Judge James E. Boasberg

DEPORTATION, Page A6

CRAIG F. WALKER/GLOBE STAFF

FIGHTING DEPORTATION — Immigration and Customs Enforcement detainees waited to speak with Maggie Fogarty, left, coordinator of the New Hampshire Immigrant Visitation Program, last month at the Strafford County Department of Corrections in Dover, N.H. Fogarty is among a group of volunteers at the jail who are working to save ICE detainees from deportation. The number of detainees there has swelled since January — and so has the demand for help. B1.

R.I. doctor's phone had 'photos' of Hezbollah leader

By Edward Fitzpatrick and Christopher Gavin
GLOBE STAFF

Brown University urged its international community to reconsider travel outside of the United States after Dr. Rasha Alawieh, a kidney transplant doctor and assistant professor at Brown Medicine, was deported late last week.

The Rhode Island doctor was questioned by US Customs and Border Protection agents at Logan Airport about photos on her phone of Iran's supreme leader and of a leader of the terrorist group, Hezbollah, federal prosecutors wrote in documents filed in court in Boston on Monday.

Alawieh, 34, who also worked at Rhode Island Hospital, traveled to Lebanon to see her

DOCTOR, Page A7

Canada braces for likely spike in migrants fleeing US

Family's journey shows risks in northern border crossings

By Paul Heintz
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

The family of four, unprepared for the cold, had been trudging for hours through a dense forest on the border of New York and Quebec. The parents had lost their shoes in a stream and were hiking barefoot in the snow, frostbite setting in, while their children, ages 1 and 2, had no gloves or hats.

Finally, at around 3:15 a.m. on March 7, the parents gave up on their plan to cross the border undetected, and the mother called 911.

"They were completely frozen. They were unable to move," said Corporal Martina Pillarova, a spokesperson for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which coordinated the rescue. "They were sitting under a tree trying to keep their children warm with their bodies."

These were migrants, presumably crossing the northern border in search of a better life. But, upending the usual narrative, they were heading north, not south — fleeing the United States for Canada. After they were brought to a local hospital to be treated for severe hypothermia, Pillarova said, they were arrested and requested refugee status.

The debate over illegal immigration in the United States in recent years has focused on those seeking to enter the country. But President Trump's vow to deport millions of those already here has Canadian authorities bracing for a spike in dangerous crossings from the south.

During the first Trump administration, mi-

CROSSING NORTH, Page A7

'They already hate us:' Brokers focus of renters' ire

Tenant-paid fees to sign leases draw lawmaker scrutiny

By Andrew Brinker
GLOBE STAFF

It is a freezing winter evening, and Thomas Macdonald cannot find apartment 41A.

He figured it would be on the fifth floor of this 19th century building in Boston's Symphony neighborhood, but there, the highest number was 39. Now a bead of sweat dribbles down the side of his forehead as he leads a trio of Northeastern University students in sweatpants back down four flights of creaking stairs and into a narrow basement.

Roughly 10 minutes of searching and two calls to the building

JOHN TLUMACKI/GLOBE STAFF

Rental broker Thomas Macdonald photographed an Allston apartment. He serves as a go-between for landlords and prospective renters.

owner later, he finally discovers apartment 41A, at the bottom of an outdoor staircase that is hidden by a stand of bushes.

Now, he can go to work.

The current occupants of unit 41A sit awkwardly in their bedrooms as Macdonald leads the students around the basement apartment. The place smells vaguely of cat urine, and there is a network of pipes running across the ceiling that may, or may not, transport the building's sewage. Macdonald explains that if they want a three-bedroom for around $4,500, this is the most spacious option they'll find.

"You have to be straightforward with people about what's realistic for them," Macdonald says after the tour as he walks back to his Honda Civic, parked hastily behind a food truck. "They already hate us"

BROKER FEES, Page A10