

Trump team rebuked for violating judge's order

People still deported to countries not their own

By Alan Feuer and Tyler Pager

NEW YORK TIMES

A federal judge in Boston said Wednesday that the Trump administration had violated an order he issued last month barring officials from deporting people to countries not their own without first giving them an opportunity to object to their removal.

The finding by Judge Brian E. Murphy was one of the strongest judicial rebukes the administration has faced so far in a series of contentious cases arising from its sprawling deportation agenda. It was not immediately clear what punishment, if any, Murphy intended to mete out against the administration or those who took part in the operation, but he asked for a list of names so he can notify them that they might all face criminal contempt penalties.

The judge's decision came at a hearing in US District Court in Boston to consider an emergency motion filed by lawyers for a group of men who they said were deported after being told they were being sent to South Sudan.

As the hearing began, officials from the Department of Homeland Security disclosed that eight immigrants had been deported Tuesday on a flight to a third country, but they refused to say where the men were going.

While much of the discussion at the hearing took place under seal, Murphy said that

DEPORTATIONS, Page A6

Older people facing another challenge: homelessness

By Kay Lazar

GLOBE STAFF

Lisa Furr was mortified. She'd worked all her life, mostly as a personal health care assistant, and raised a family. But she suddenly found herself in her 50s without a home.

She fled an abusive marriage three years ago, carrying what she could fit in one suitcase. Her weight and blood pressure shot up, her knees gave out, her ability to work declined, and, with little money, she resorted to alternately renting a room from a friend and couch surfing at her daughter's home in Boston.

"A lot of people didn't know I was homeless; they thought I was back just chillin' with my daughter," Furr said. "Just having that secret, I felt embarrassed because I was in my 50s, and I just couldn't understand how I ended up here."

After months of ferrying belongings from place to place, she found an apartment in October with Hearth, a Boston nonprofit that operates several small, affordable housing sites around the city for older adults. Furr's experience is a window into the ominous wave of older adults who are losing their homes or barely scraping by.

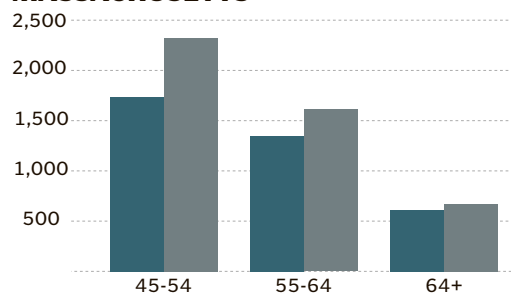

Hefty housing prices, lack of affordable homes, and an aging population have proved a potent mix. Adults 50 and older are the fastest

HOMELESS, Page A10

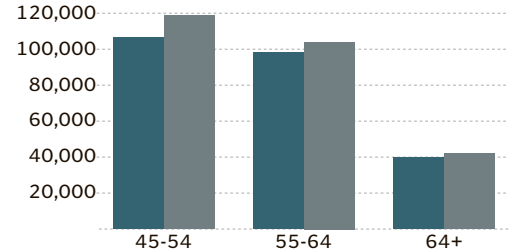

Older homeless individuals 2023-2024

■ 2023 ■ 2024

MASSACHUSETTS

NATION

SOURCE: US Department of Housing and Urban Development

GLOBE STAFF

GOP straggles toward 'beautiful' bill

JIM WATSON/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

Ignoring South Africa's history, President Trump amplified false claims as he pressed President Cyril Ramaphosa to protect white Afrikaners from violent attacks. A4.

With a deadline looming, rebellion, warnings, turmoil

By Sam Brodey and Jackie Kucinich

GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — As middle schoolers in matching shirts wandered past House Speaker

LETTER FROM D.C. Mike Johnson's Capitol office Wednesday morning, members of the archconservative House Freedom Caucus emerged threatening to destroy something "beautiful."

The night before, Johnson had hashed out a deal with the moderate middle of his conference: members from blue states who have made their votes on President Trump's sweeping tax cut and spending reduction package contingent on an increase in the state and local tax deduction.

But now, Johnson's most conservative members were rebelling, insisting that further changes needed to be made to the bill before they could contemplate voting yes. Soon after they left the speaker's office, news quickly broke that the hard-liners were headed that afternoon to the White House with Johnson in tow, to hash it out with Trump himself.

Trump, of course, had already made his wishes clear during a visit to rally the House Republican Conference on Tuesday: stop squabbling and start moving the bill meant to encompass his second-term policy agenda — which he has dubbed his "one big beautiful bill."

According to lawmakers in the room, the president warned

LETTER, Page A7

Crossing the line on immigration

In voter group, Trump foes — and backers — say he's going too far

"I do not like the way ICE is handling it, to go into or wait outside churches and grocery stores. You know, go after people for the color of their skin or something and harass the American people."

T Karen Sysyn, 54,
Londonderry, N.H.

"The problem with the immigration approach that this current president and Republican Party is taking is that there is no nuance. It is based on broad, bigoted perspectives that simply coming into the country without documentation makes you a criminal."

H Sidney Trantham, 56,
Boston

"I would like to see everyone who came here illegally under the Biden administration deported, whether they go to church or are gang members. But they're being stopped by woke judges."

T Seth Sole-Robertson, 45,
Medway

● Republican ● Independent ● Democrat T voted Trump H voted Harris

By Brian MacQuarrie, Omar Mohammed, Steven Porter, Diti Kohli, Sabrina Shankman, and Edward Fitzpatrick

GLOBE STAFF

Karen Sysyn of Londonderry, N.H., is a staunch supporter of President Trump, but his immigration policies have given her pause. She voted for Trump in 2020 and 2024 and backs his economic vision, even after she lost her job as a housing inspector this year because of her employer's fear of federal funding cuts.

Sysyn, 54, said she questions the fundamental fairness of his immigration actions and whether the administration is violating the right to due process.

"I do not like the way ICE is handling it, to go into or wait outside churches and grocery stores," said Sysyn, an independent voter. "You know, go after people for the color of their skin or something and harass the American people."

Trump pledged during his campaign to upend US immigration practices by stanching unauthorized border crossings and deporting millions of migrants who had entered the country illegally. Since then, those promises have become blunt-force policy amid a blizzard of executive orders aimed at nearly every facet of immigration.

Social media sites have been rife with recurring scenes of masked Immigration and Customs Enforcement officers arresting migrants and foreign students in the streets, including Tufts University student Rümeysa Öztürk on a Somerville sidewalk.

Sysyn's concerns about Trump's immigration policies reflect fears expressed by others in a recent Globe survey of 12 New Englanders of differing ages, races, and political viewpoints. Nearly all of the voters, participating in an occasional Globe series to gauge their opinions about the Trump administration

VOTERS, Page A6

Mayor's 'bonus' is so much more

Issue swirls around DeMaria in election year

By Stephanie Ebbert

GLOBE STAFF

EVERETT — Back in 2016, the proposal sounded simple enough. John Hanlon, then president of the City Council, suggested that an incumbent mayor's pay be automatically bumped after each reelection.

"For every full term, he will get a $10,000 salary adjustment. But he has to complete the full term," Hanlon said during a meeting of the council's Ways and Means Committee. "This comes out to $2,500 a year."

The city's chief financial officer, Eric Demas, seemed to be on the same page, saying that the mayor would "serve four years, receive a $10,000 increase."

Councilors made clear they wanted to keep the salary up to date for whoever was elected without having to regularly approve controversial salary hikes. But the immediate beneficiary was Mayor Carlo DeMaria, who was first elected in 2007 and remains Everett's leader today.

Last week, the current council president, Stephanie

EVERETT, Page A10

Breakfast cereals are becoming less healthy, filled with increasing amounts of sugar, fat, and sodium, a study found. A2.

The state's "millionaires tax" has generated $2.6 billion in revenue so far this fiscal year. B1.

If you're not yet worried about AI, now might be a good time to start, writes Hiawatha Bray. D1.

A colossal pour

Thursday: Very wet, windy. High 48-53. Low 44-49.

Friday: A few showers. High 55-60. Low 48-53.

Sunrise: 5:16 Sunset: 8:06

Weather and Comics, D5-6. Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 307, NO. 142

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

0 947725 4