Senate Rebukes Trump on Iran With Vote to Curb War Powers

Nonbinding measure after House approval follows president's deal with Tehran

WASHINGTON—The Senate voted to limit President Trump's ability to conduct military operations against Iran without congressional authorization after four Republicans joined with Democrats in a stinging rebuke to Trump a week after he signed a preliminary agreement with Iran.

The resolution passed by the Senate Tuesday afternoon, in a 50-48 vote, directs the president to remove U.S. armed forces from hostilities against Iran unless explicitly authorized by Congress, other than to defend the U.S., an ally or partner from "imminent attack." The resolution, previously passed by the House, is nonbinding but marks the first time both chambers of Congress have passed the same measure to curb Trump's power to wage the war against Iran.

Republican Sens. Bill Cassidy of Louisiana, Susan Collins of Maine, Lisa Murkowski of Alaska and Rand Paul of Kentucky and nearly all Democrats voted in support of the resolution. Sen. Mitch McConnell (R., Ky.), who has been absent while hospitalized, missed the vote, as did Sen. Dave McCormick (R., Pa.). Democratic Sen. John Fetterman of Pennsylvania voted against the measure.

The war "will go down in the history books as one of the worst foreign policies America has ever made or any country has ever made," said Sen. Chuck Schumer of New York, the Democratic leader.

In a post on Truth Social, Trump called the war-powers vote "poorly timed and meaningless." He added, "These Senators have just made my job more difficult, but I will get it done, one way or the other, because I always get it done!"

Republican Sen. Jim Risch of Idaho, who serves as chair of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, had urged his colleagues to vote no, arguing that Trump would pay no attention to it but the Iranians would. "If this passes, Please turn to page A4

Ellison's $45 Million Helped Seal Ties With President

Larry Ellison didn't join the gaggle of CEOs that traveled with President Trump on his state visit to China. He wasn't among the guests at a White House dinner Trump hosted with tech titans. He also skipped the UFC event on Trump's 80th birthday.

By Emily Glazer, Annie Linskey and Jessica Toonkel

The Oracle billionaire didn't need to be at these public events. Ellison, 81 years old, has developed a more private friendship with Trump that has helped his tech company's business as well as his son's effort to assemble a media conglomerate. Key to the relationship: Ellison's money.

Ellison gave about $45 million to a political nonprofit group supporting Trump's election efforts in 2024, according to people familiar with the fundraising.

More recently, Ellison has given millions of dollars more to groups that support Trump since the election, the people said, with some of the funds going to Trump's legacy initiatives in Washington, D.C. Oracle is among the corporate sponsors listed by Freedom 250, a Trump-aligned group hosting celebrations for the country's 250th birthday.

Florida's Messiest Political Fight Is Between Two Birds

A push to give the flamingo top billing awakens the 'forces of Big Mockingbird'

By ELIZABETH BERNSTEIN

MIAMI—Tourist shops across Florida hawk T-shirts, hats and beach bags emblazoned with the flamingo. A two-story flamingo sculpture named Phoebe welcomes visitors at Tampa International Airport. Flamingo is the name of a magazine about the state.

You can send your children to a Flamingo elementary school, buy groceries at a Flamingo supermarket, get your hair cut at the Stinky Flamingo Salon or enjoy adult entertainment at the Brass Flamingo strip club.

The state bird? Naturally, it's the Northern mockingbird. But not for long, if a coalition of legislators, scientists, business owners, artists and Florida literati has its way. They aim to unseat the mockingbird, which has held the top perch for 99 years, and crown the American flamingo state bird.

"It's the only issue that everyone in Florida can agree on," said Dave Barry, the author and Pulitzer Prize-winning columnist who lives in Miami and recently joined Team Flamingo. "Except the forces of Big Mockingbird."

Flamingophiles argue the rosy-feathered beauty is iconic, unique to the state, and making a surprising comeback thanks to conserva- Please turn to page A2

Tide Tops Detergent Market. Why Push Yet Another Version?

By NATASHA KHAN

MASON, Ohio—As the nation's dominant purveyor of laundry detergent, Procter & Gamble knows full well that consumers have strong feelings about their wash.

Every time P&G pushes out a new product, it is making a calculated gamble, and the stakes are highest with its crown jewel—Tide detergent. So when one of the company's top research-and-development executives and its scientists took their latest concoction—a detergent "tile" called Tide evo—to its fabric-care sales and marketing team, there was plenty of skepticism.

It had taken years to persuade consumers to switch to Tide pods. Why roll the dice again? What would differentiate it?

Parents Turn to GLP-1s For Their Young Kids

By ANDREA PETERSEN

WINDER, Ga.—Ayden Gatlin-Wright lay down on the living room sofa and pulled up his shirt to expose his stomach to get an injection of a weight-loss drug.

"Ow," Ayden yelped, cartoons playing in the background. He is 9 years old.

Ayden and twin brother Kayden are part of a growing epidemic of childhood obesity. Traditional weight-loss methods don't work well for many children, particularly those with severe obesity.

Now, even elementary schoolers are being put on popular weight-loss drugs such as Wegovy.

By prescribing GLP-1 medications early, doctors have said they aim to prevent lifelong obesity and complications such as Type 2 diabetes and high blood pressure, which are showing up in teens and even younger children.

These drugs aren't yet approved for obesity in patients this young. And without further studies, it isn't certain that young children can safely use the medications for weight loss without compromising a critical period of growth for their bones and brain.

But doctors prescribing the drugs off-label said the risks of obesity complications for some patients are too serious not to try a treatment that can be so effective. These medicines are approved for obesity in kids as young as 12 years old in the U.S. and are being tested in children as young as 6.
