

THE PRESIDENT and British Prime Minister Keir Starmer hold a news conference at the Chequers estate.

TRUMP GRIPES IN ROYAL COMPANY

At castle banquet, the president rails against migrants and the 2020 election outcome.

By MICHAEL WILNER

WASHINGTON — At a banquet table fit for a king, but set specially for him, President Trump called his state visit to the United Kingdom this week “one of the highest honors of my life.”

He then proceeded to tell guests at the white tie event that the United States was “a very sick country” last year before becoming “the hottest” again under his rule.

During a news conference on Thursday with British Prime Minister Keir Starmer at the Chequers estate hailing a bilateral deal on artificial intelligence investments said to be worth hundreds of billions of dollars, Trump called America’s relationship with Britain “unbreakable,” bigger than any single esoteric policy disagreement.

But he quickly pivoted from magnanimity on the [See Britain, A4]

U.S., U.K. sign tech agreement

Deal, worth billions, aims to promote investment in AI and other areas in both countries. WORLD, A4

Kimmel’s benching shows the sway of FCC

Hollywood labor unions rebuke ABC’s decision to pull late-night host off air after Carr’s threats

By STEPHEN BATTAGLIO AND MEG JAMES

On a Wednesday podcast, Federal Communications Commission Chairman Brendan Carr said ABC had to act on Jimmy Kimmel’s comments about the killing of conservative activist Charlie Kirk. “We can do it the easy way or the hard way,” the Trump appointee told right-wing commentator Benny Johnson.

The intended audience, the owners of ABC stations across the country, heard the message loud and clear. They chose the easy way.

Within hours of Carr’s comments, Nexstar, which controls 32 ABC affiliates, agreed to drop “Jimmy Kimmel Live!” indefinitely.

Walt Disney Co.-owned ABC quickly followed with its own announcement that it was pulling Kimmel from the network. Sinclair Broadcasting, a TV station company long sympathetic to conservative causes, also shelved the show and went a step further by demanding that Kimmel make a financial contribution to Kirk’s family and his conservative advocacy organization Turning Point USA.

It is not clear if or when Kimmel’s show will return. On Thursday, high-level ABC executives spoke with Kimmel and his team to see whether there was a way to “bring the temperature down,” allowing the show to return, according to a person familiar with the matter who was not authorized to comment.

The situation [See Kimmel, A12]

CHRISTINA HOUSE Los Angeles Times

PROTESTERS on Thursday outside of Disney’s headquarters in Burbank.

SILENCING DISSENT: ABC’s action isn’t just Jimmy Kimmel’s problem. It’s a problem for all of L.A., columnist Anita Chabria writes. BUSINESS, A12

State sticks with wind power plans

California holds firm despite Trump’s funding cancellation of offshore project.

By HAYLEY SMITH

California’s ambitious plan to generate clean electricity from offshore wind suffered a considerable blow recently when the Trump administration canceled nearly half a billion dollars in federal funding for the state’s largest project. But industry insiders, experts and officials told The Times they aren’t slowing the pursuit of this up-and-coming technology.

The Golden State last year approved a landmark plan for developing 25 gigawatts of floating offshore wind by 2045. Five ocean leases have already been granted to energy companies off the coast of Humboldt and Morro Bay, with the potential to produce up to 10 gigawatts of electricity.

The plan eventually could see 1,600 turbines as tall as the Eiffel Tower in federal waters 20 to 50 miles offshore, producing enough electricity for 25 million homes. It is a climate solution and key component of the state’s goal of reaching 100% carbon neutrality by 2045.

Floating offshore wind is relatively new compared with fixed offshore wind, which involves attaching turbines directly to the sea floor. Most offshore wind around the world so far is fixed, but California has been exploring floating turbines because the Pacific Ocean is so deep. The floating technology has been successfully deployed in Norway, France, Portugal and China.

Federal officials last year said California’s offshore [See Wind, A14]

Harmful algae not tied to fires

Researchers say blazes didn’t cause the toxic blooms that led to an uptick in sea animal deaths. CALIFORNIA, B1

A decade of art at the Broad

Inside some of the museum’s key moments as the downtown landmark turns 10. ENTERTAINMENT, E1

Smart glasses get a second look

After earlier products stumbled, tech firms are pushing eyewear again, this time with AI. BUSINESS, A10

Weather

Partly sunny; humid. L.A. Basin: 84/67. B6

Markets A11 Opinion Voices A13

For the latest news, go to latimes.com.

Kershaw hangs up his cleats

Dodgers’ longtime ace to retire after stellar career

By JACK HARRIS

Last year, in the middle of a World Series celebration he had spent two decades dreaming about, Clayton Kershaw took the mic at Dodger Stadium and made a declaration.

“I love you guys, thank you!” he shouted to an adoring Chavez Ravine crowd.

“Dodger for life!”

On Thursday, that distinction was cemented.

After 18 seasons, three Cy Young Awards, an MVP, more than 3,000 strikeouts and two World Series titles, Kershaw announced he will retire from Major League Baseball at the end of this year — starting and finishing his career in a Dodgers uniform.

“I’m at peace with it,” Kershaw said before Thursday’s game. “I think it’s the right time and it’s been such a fun year, it’s been such a blast.”

[See Kershaw, A14]

GINA FERRAZZI Los Angeles Times

DODGERS pitcher Clayton Kershaw acknowledges the crowd after his 3,000th career strikeout on July 2.

A LEGEND: Kershaw’s Dodgers career will always endear him to L.A., Bill Plaschke writes. SPORTS, B10

Edison details its payout plan for fire victims

Move comes despite not having accepted responsibility for starting Eaton blaze.

By MELODY PETERSEN

Southern California Edison hasn’t accepted responsibility for igniting the Eaton fire, but it is now offering each victim who lost their home hundreds of thousands of dollars, according to a draft of its planned compensation program.

The owner of a 1,500-square-foot home destroyed in the wildfire, given as an example in the company’s draft, would receive $900,000 to rebuild. In addition, the utility is offering that owner an additional $200,000 for agreeing to settle their claim directly with Edison.

The family of each destroyed home also would get compensation for pain and suffering — $100,000 for each adult and $50,000 for each child, according to the draft.

Edison announced in late July that it was creating a program to directly compensate Eaton fire victims to help avoid lengthy litigation. The Jan. 7 fire destroyed more than 9,400 homes and other structures in Altadena and killed at least 19 people.

Pedro Pizarro, chief executive of Edison International, the utility’s parent company, said in a news release Wednesday that the compensation program for victims was “designed to help them focus on their recovery.”

The company said that it would hold four community meetings to get public comments on the proposed compensation plan, the first scheduled for Thursday at 7 p.m.

“While the investigation continues, inviting input on draft details is the next step in helping the community rebuild faster and stronger,” [See Edison, A8]

Proposed compensation

Examples of what Southern California Edison is offering to pay Eaton fire victims:

$900,000

To rebuild for the owner of a 1,500-square-foot home destroyed in the wildfire.

$200,000

For the homeowner to agree to settle their claim directly with Edison.

$1.5

million

Payment for pain and suffering to families of those who died.

Internet a focus after Kirk slaying

Suspect’s alleged Discord confession fuels talk of more aggressive regulation.

By JENNY JARVIE, SALVADOR HERNANDEZ AND RICHARD WINTON

Just before Tyler Robinson turned himself in for the murder of conservative activist Charlie Kirk, authorities say he appeared to leave a trail of incriminating messages on the online gaming platform Discord.

At first, his messages were playful. When a friend on a group chat noticed his likeness to the skinny white man in the grainy photos released by the FBI of the Utah Valley University shooting suspect — asking Robinson “wya,” an abbreviation of “where you at?” — Robinson was quick to joke: “My doppelganger is trying to get me in trouble.”

But in a later Discord chat, Robinson appeared to confess.

“Hey guys, I have bad news for you all,” Robinson said before he went to a police station the next day to surrender: “It was me at UVU yesterday.”

Discord, the gaming messaging platform used by more than 200 million people, now finds itself at the center of the Kirk murder investigation and a roiling, heavily politicized national discussion about the internet’s role in fomenting violent extremism. Some lawmakers are threatening to impose more aggressive regulations and oversight on social media platforms.

After federal agents served Discord with a search warrant, FBI Director Kash Patel said Tuesday at a Senate Committee on the Judiciary hearing that agents are investigating “anyone and everyone” who interacted with Robinson on the platform. [See Kirk, A8]