Join the event for advancing U.S. leadership in critical technologies.
ai+ expo
MAY 7-9, 2026 | Washington D.C.
250 YEARS OF INNOVATION

The Washington Post

Prices may vary in areas outside metropolitan Washington.

RE V1 V2 V3 V4

Showers 63/54 • Tomorrow: T-storm 65/50 B20

Democracy Dies in Darkness

TUESDAY, APRIL 28, 2026 · $4

SUZANNE PLUNKETT/REUTERS/POOL

Britain's King Charles III and Queen Camilla join first lady Melania Trump and President Donald Trump at the White House on Monday.

Alleged gunman appears in court to face charges

ACCUSED OF ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE TRUMP

Officials: Email prioritized targeted government leaders

BY SALVADOR RIZZO, JEREMY ROEBUCK, MARK BERMAN AND PERRY STEIN

The 31-year-old man arrested this weekend for allegedly trying to storm the White House correspondents' dinner was charged Monday with attempting to assassinate President Donald Trump.

Federal officials said Cole Tomas Allen, of Torrance, California, traveled across the country last week ahead of the black-tie event at the Washington Hilton, then charged a security checkpoint leading toward the gala with a shotgun and pistol.

In an affidavit, an FBI special agent wrote that Allen had an email set to go out to family members and a former employer, which described administration officials as "targets, prioritized from highest-ranking to lowest."

Allen made a brief court appearance Monday when a judge announced the charges, which also include transporting firearms across state lines and discharging

SEE SUSPECT ON A2

False flag? First came shooting, then the conspiracy theories. A9

Kimmel: First lady, president decry ABC late-night host's parody. B1

Washington welcomes royal visitors

King and queen's trip offers Britain a chance to mend ties with Trump

BY MICHAEL BIRNBAUM AND STEVE HENDRIX

Days after a shooting that apparently targeted President Donald Trump's administration and sparked fresh concerns about security in the nation's capital, King Charles III embarked Monday on a rare state visit that promised to pit the president's admiration for British royalty against his fury at the British government.

The long-planned encounter had been intended to showcase close Anglo-American relations 250 years after the Declaration of Independence. Instead, it comes in the middle of one of the sharpest fights between Washington and London in generations, as Trump and Prime Minister Keir Starmer tussle over the president's war on Iran and whether either side still wants to hold on to the close cooperation of the past.

Preparations for the event were shadowed by Saturday's shooting at the annual White House correspondents' dinner, which forced the evacuation of Trump, most of his Cabinet and hundreds of journalists, officials and celebrities.

The king and Queen Camilla started their trip by going directly to the White House, where they were greeted by Trump and first lady Melania Trump: handshakes for the king and queen from the president, double cheek kisses for the royals from his wife. The quartet posed for smiling pictures in front of the South Portico before going inside for tea. Most of their visit will take place Tuesday.

British officials hope their monarch can paper over the tensions between Washington and London with some pomp, using his royal mystique to remind Trump of the advantages of

SEE VISIT ON A10

White House will do review of security in light of shooting

BY DAN DIAMOND

The White House is reviewing how best to protect President Donald Trump after Saturday's shooting at the White House correspondents' dinner raised new questions about the protocols and procedures needed to keep the nation's leaders safe.

White House Chief of Staff Susie Wiles plans to convene a meeting this week with leaders of the Secret Service and the Department of Homeland Security to discuss lessons from Saturday's shooting and next steps to protect the president, officials said Monday.

White House press secretary Karoline Leavitt declined to say what changes may be made but did not rule out new limits on Trump's public appearances or other changes.

"These conversations will take place in private, but if adjustments need to be made to protect the president, they will be made," Leavitt told reporters on Monday.

Saturday's incident — in which

SEE SECURITY ON A2

Supreme Court weighs bounds of digital privacy

Law enforcement use of Google location data history up for debate

BY JULIAN MARK

The Supreme Court on Monday grappled with the constitutionality of law enforcement's use of Google location history data to track down a suspect, in a case that could further define the Constitution's protections for digital privacy.

Some of the justices seemed inclined to uphold what are known as geofence warrants, a new tool that police use to narrow down suspects based on location data collected by companies such as Google. Although some justices seemed to agree that a warrant is necessary to obtain that data, they wrestled with how such warrants square with the Constitution, drafted long before the advent of technology that could pinpoint an individual's location.

Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. said one of the central concerns about the warrants is that they could enable the government to catalogue everyone who was at particular location — such as a place of worship or political organization — at a particular time.

"What are the restraints that would prevent that from becoming a problem?" Roberts asked.

Attorneys for the Trump administration argue that the warrants — which seek to locate everyone who was within a specific geographic area at a particular time — can help investigators crack difficult cases without

SEE SUPREME COURT ON A20

Monsanto: Supreme Court hears weed killer, cancer lawsuit. A20

Data center sprawl engulfs tiny Pennsylvania town

HEATHER AINSWORTH/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Megan Farrell sells "No Data Centers" merchanise in Archbald, where six data centers are planned.

BY TIM CRAIG

ARCHBALD, PA. — Tim Bachak would look out to his backyard most evenings to see wildlife emerging from the forest of birch, maple and oak trees hugging his property.

He regularly spotted black bears, deer and coyotes. Owls would hoot and turkeys would scurry. Bachak, a 43-year-old public school teacher, saw the activity as a sign this former coal town had recharged from its polluting past.

Then last month, Bachak woke up to the sound of chainsaws. Workers were cutting down the forest, about 180 acres of trees, to make way for a massive data center.

"Those animals now have no place to go," Bachak said on a recent afternoon as he looked out at a vast landscape of tree stumps. "It's disgusting. ... Why are they putting these things near us, near our schools and near our parks?"

Throughout Archbald, a northeastern Pennsylvania town of

SEE DATA CENTERS ON A14

BUSINESS NEWS A13
CLASSIFIEDS B15
COMICS B4
METRO B12
NATIONAL NEWS A3
OBITUARIES B14
OPINION PAGES A17
SPORTS B7
STYLE B1
TELEVISION B6
WEATHER B20
WORLD A8

CONTENT © 2026
The Washington Post / Year 149, No. 54565

0 70628 21100 3

MAY 7-9, 2026 | Washington D.C.
Attend for free at expo.scsp.ai
hosted by: SPECIAL COMPETITIVE STUDIES PROJECT