Suspect in press gala attack charged

Calif. man accused of targeting president in assassination attempt

WASHINGTON — The man who authorities say tried to storm the White House Correspondents' Association dinner with guns and knives was charged Monday with the attempted assassination of President Donald Trump and will remain at least temporarily behind bars as the case moves forward.

Cole Tomas Allen appeared in court Monday to face federal charges in a chaotic encounter that resulted in shots being fired, Trump being rushed off the stage and guests ducking for cover underneath their tables. He was taken into custody after the shooting on Saturday night and sat beside his lawyers in a brief appearance Monday in Washington's federal court.

Besides being charged with attempting to assassinate the Republican president, Allen also faces two firearms charges. He did not enter a plea.

A judge granted a prosecutor's request Monday to keep Allen, 31, of Torrance, California, detained pending additional hearings. One of Allen's lawyers, Tezira Abe, asked for a detention hearing and noted Allen has no criminal record.

"He also is presumed innocent at this time," she said.

Prosecutors have not revealed a motive, but in a message reviewed by the AP that authorities say was sent by Allen to family members minutes before the attack, Allen referred to himself as a "Friendly Federal Assassin," made repeated references to the Republican president without naming him and alluded to grievances over a range of Trump administration actions.

Authorities: Gun was under hospital blanket

Firearm that man used to shoot two cops was allegedly illegally purchased

After being arrested for allegedly robbing a dollar store on Saturday morning, Alphanso Talley allegedly told police he had swallowed some drugs, so officers took him to Endeavor Health Swedish Hospital in the Lincoln Square neighborhood to get checked out.

What unfolded next was an act of violence that left one Chicago police officer dead and a second fighting for his life, authorities said Monday. Talley allegedly was able to hide a gun up until a CT scan was about to be performed. That's when Talley allegedly pulled the pistol — illegally bought in an Indiana straw purchase — out from under a blanket, shooting one officer in the face and a second in the chin.

Prosecutors have charged the 26-year-old Talley with murder, attempted murder and escaping from police, among other charges. He also had three warrants outstanding for his arrest, according to police.

It was the first multiple shooting of Chicago police officers since the 2021 killing of Officer Ella French and the severe wounding of her partner, Carlos Yanez.

Talley's case was called midday for a detention hearing at the Leighton Criminal Court-house, where police brass, police union leaders, aldermen, Yanez and members of Officer John Bartholomew's family were in attendance. Judge Luciano Panici Jr. ordered Talley detained as the case against him progresses.

It remained unclear Monday how the gun used in the shooting entered the hospital. Police sources told the Tribune that investigators were weighing if Talley was able to hide the gun in a body cavity to evade it being found in a pat down and prior to being treated, or if he was properly searched.

Talley was seated at a defense table flanked by five courtroom deputies and cuffed. He refused to acknowledge the judge when

Chicago-area woman finds herself listed on century-old Irish census

Roselle 105-year-old is one of few remaining from 1926 headcount

By Tess Kenny
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

One hundred years ago, a few thousand miles away across the Atlantic, a quiet moment in history rippled across northwestern Europe.

The day was April 18, 1926. Ireland was coming off centuries of British rule and a bloody civil war and hadn't paused to understand where it stood, or how it had changed, in years. But the young nation was dawning a new age. And that spring night, Ireland conducted its first census in more than a decade — its first as a free state.

Today, there are few living testaments to that headcount. But newly revealed records show that one of them is just a few miles outside of Chicago. And she's a spitfire.

At 105 years old, Roselle resident Nancy Lally is part of a group of centenarians whose names are on the Irish census of 1926, which

Panel reaches final stretch of Midway Blitz hearings

Katie Abraham's mother says she has 'had enough' of federal officials invoking daughter's memory

By Olivia Olander
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The mother of the woman whose name the Trump administration used to justify the sweeping federal immigration crackdown that swept across Chicagoland last fall told an Illinois commission Monday that she had "had enough" of officials invoking her daughter's memory.

In one of her few public comments since the Operation Midway Blitz surge, Denise Lorence, mother of Katie Abraham, testified along with North Side and Evanston residents, who looked back with anger and dismay on federal agents' often combative efforts in their neighborhoods during the two-month enforcement campaign.

"You may have heard her name, not because of the compassionate, caring person that she was. ... You've probably heard her name because Operation Midway Blitz was named in her honor," Lorence said Monday. "This is what my family has been dragged into."

Abraham, 20, was killed in a drunken driving crash by an immigrant without permanent legal status. The Trump administration repeatedly cited her death to justify the crackdown. Her father, Joe Abraham, supported the administration's actions as they drew attention to his daughter's death. Lorence wrote in the Tribune in October that her daughter would not have wanted her name used as it was.

"I wouldn't wish the emotional turmoil that I've experienced on anyone," Lorence said.

Lorence's words were the centerpiece of a day filled with testimony
