President Trump welcomed Russian President Vladimir Putin on the tarmac at Joint Base Elmendorf-Richardson in Alaska before their summit Friday.

Summit Yields No Breakthrough

Leaders cite progress in Ukraine talks, but Trump says ‘no deal until there is a deal’ man's signature extravagance: a red carpet, a military fly-over and a ride in the presidential limousine. But Trump left to return to Washington with little to show for all the pageantry. The U.S. president and Russian leader Vladimir Putin ended their highly anticipated meeting without announcing a breakthrough, leaving the path toward ending the war in Ukraine unclear. By Friday evening, Trump, who had taken a risk in inviting the sanctioned Kremlin leader to the U.S., was stuck in the same predicament he faced days prior: Putin remains obstinate, deeply reluctant to end the war that he started 3½ years ago without concessions on Ukraine's future. Both men staked their political reputations on a successful summit, and Putin appears to have come out on top. The Russian leader was treated as an equal on U.S. soil, managed to sidestep any potential U.S. sanctions for now and announced no battlefield concessions. Trump, who vowed on the campaign trail to end the war on his first day in office, failed to secure even a temporary cease-fire. Still, it remained to be seen whether the discussions could lay the groundwork for future progress. Trump, standing in front of a backdrop that read “PURSUING PEACE,” said the two made “some headway” and expressed optimism that discussions would continue. Trump told Fox News that he would grade the meeting a “10” on a scale of one to 10 “in the sense that we got along great,” and he said he expected Putin and President Volodymyr Zelensky of Ukraine would set up a future meeting. “Now, it's really up to President Zelensky to get it done,” Trump told Fox News, saying that the U.S. and Russia agreed on several points but still need to find consensus on “one or two pretty significant items.” Trump made it clear there was a long road ahead. “There's no deal until there's a deal,” Trump said after the close of the summit. The typically talkative U.S. president took no questions from the dozens of journalists assembled before him. Putin, in his remarks after the meeting, gave no indication he was prepared to agree to a cease-fire, repeating that Please turn to page A6

U.S. Stock Market Dominance Stirs Worry In Europe

By Chelsey Dulaney and Joe Wallace

The London Stock Exchange overhauled the ceremony for welcoming new companies to its ranks last year, adding in confetti cannons, slick videos and cinematic music. It has mostly been used for events like product launches and anniversaries. So far this year, six companies have gone public in the U.K. raising $208 million, according to Dealogic, the lowest level in three decades of data. It isn't much better across the English Channel, despite surging stock markets. Initial public offerings in continental Europe have nearly halved in value compared with last year. Fundraising in the U.S., meanwhile, has jumped 38% to around $40 billion, while IPOs more than doubled in value in Hong Kong after a fallow patch. Tech stars like Swedish “buy now, pay later” company Klarna and British chip designer Arm are eschewing local markets to list in New York. And stock-market heavyweights are disappearing, either bought out by U.S. companies or moving their listings stateside where business is Please turn to page A2

It's the Summer New York's Tree Counters Were Waiting For

Another census sends volunteers fanning out across the city; 'Am I tree famous?'

By Matt Grossman

Robert Hay is a stay-at-home dad who spends his days volunteering and taking care of his two daughters. But every 10 years he becomes a New York City star. That's because the 46-year-old Queens resident is really good at counting trees. He discovered the skill in 2005 when his girlfriend told him he could volunteer for the New York tree census, a decennial effort to tally every one of the five boroughs' more than 800,000 trees and assess their size and health. Hay liked to fill out a scorecard at baseball games and track mileage on road trips so he figured he could be an asset. He was right. After getting his first taste of the tree-counting life, he returned in 2015 with a vengeance, tally- Please turn to page A11

America's Defining Mobility Is Stalling

The paralysis has economic consequences for everyone

By Konrad Putzier and Rachel Louise Ensigen

Americans are stuck in place. People are moving to new homes and new cities at around the lowest rate on record. Companies have fewer roles for entry-level workers trying to launch their lives. Workers who do have jobs are hanging on to them. Economists worry the phenomenon is putting some of the country's trademark dynamism at risk. Josue Leon, who recently graduated from the University of Pennsylvania with an engineering degree, applied for over 200 jobs since April, piling up credit-card debt and living in his girlfriend's family's home. World Economic Forum Clears Founder Schwab

By Jenny Strasburg and Shalini Ramachandran

The World Economic Forum said an investigation into founder Klaus Schwab found minor expense irregularities but no material wrongdoing. The Davos conference organizer also said it was shuffling the leadership of its board in the wake of the probe. The board's interim chairman, Peter Brabeck-Letmathe, a former chief executive of Nestlé, resigned after a meeting of trustees earlier this week to discuss the probe's conclusions, according to a letter reviewed by The Wall Street Journal. He raised concerns about a “toxic” work environment in his resignation letter, which hasn't been previously reported. At a meeting on Friday, the Forum appointed two new interim co-chairs to steer the board of trustees: BlackRock boss Larry Fink and Swiss billionaire André Hoffmann. The Forum said Friday that the board wants to move on from a dispute with its founder that has roiled the organization. The board said it has concluded “there is no evidence of material wrongdoing” by Schwab or his wife, Hilde Schwab. “Minor irregularities, stem- Please turn to page A4
